65 Die in Insurrection Sweeping Philippines; Troops Guard Manila

Authorities Are Stunned by Suddenness of Uprising.

Official Reports Situation Grave

Acting GovernorGeneral Advised to Flee Back to the Capital.

By the Associated Press.

Manila (Friday), May 3.—Sixty-five persons were reported slain in two battles growing out of bitter and widespread uprisings in the provinces today against the projected new commonwealth governmental system.

The suddenness and extent of the insurgent movement stunned high authorities.

Capt. Jose Guido, of the constabulary intelligence, reported to the governor general's office that the situation was "very grave." He suggested that acting Gov. Gen. Joseph Hayden dash back to Manila at once by airplane from a mountain province where he has been on an inspection tour.

Two bloody battles were fought between constabulary detachments and extremists in Laguna Province south of here.

Other Disorders.

The constabulary reported more than 60 dead as the result of the principal fight at Cabuyao Laguna, but that the situation there was under control.

Previously five persons were reported slain in a clash between rebels and constabulary men at Santa Rosa, Laguna. One constabulary soldier was reported among the dead and three others were wounded.

A correspondent of the Spanish language newspaper La Vanguardia wired from Cabuyao that the extremists had barricaded themselves behind a wall of the town plaza for the night.

Manila (Friday), May 3.—United States soldiers and Filipino troops guarded Manila today from the threat of attack by a radical uprising in the nearby provinces, led by natives demanding immediate independence for the Philippine Islands.

Sakdalistas instigated the uprising. It was one of the most serious anti-American demonstrations in recent troubled months, spreading unrest in the islands.

The Sakdalistas' "March on Manila" was frustrated last night by the warning of a loyal rural official and quick concentration of the Filipino constabulary.

The president (mayor) of the town of Mantinlupa, in Rizal Province, tipped the constabulary that

Gulden's Drop Spreads Panic

By the Associated Press.

Danzig, Free City of Danzig, May 2.—Financial panic hit the Free City of Danzig when the population learned today the gulden had been devalued by 42.37 per cent.

Runs on banks and stores began immediately, paralyzing the normal activity of the city. A majority of stores shut their doors in the afternoon, but the banks faced the music until the regular closing time.

The Volkstag held a hurried special session this afternoon and the Senate named a price commissioner to keep prices from rising. Fears of inflation and soaring prices sent inhabitants en masse to shops to lay in stocks of clothing and household supplies.

There was a violent reaction among anti-Nazis, who charged that extravagant spending by the Senate drove the city's finances into a desperate condition and that the budget was kept secret.

The need of more money to run the government was given by these quarters as the real reason for devaluation, rather than speculative raids, said officially to have been the cause.

The gulden's gold coverage has dwindled under Nazi rule, but is said to be still sufficient to give the government a handsome profit under devaluation.

Berne, Switzerland, May 2 (AP).—Switzerland, its franc threatened in recent weeks by steady drainage of gold from the Swiss National Bank, moved today to fight speculation on foreign exchanges and stock markets in order "to show that the franc will be kept at its present parity."

Chancellorsville—The Past Reborn

A page of American history came to life yesterday as the Battle of Chancellorsville was re-enacted. Here is a moment of hand-to-hand combat, with Marines and V. M. I. Cadets playing the rival roles.

Rebels Tread Again Where Jackson Fell

Chancellorsville Courthouse, May 2.—Seventy-two years ago today a sorrel soldier on a sorrel nag disappeared quickly and quietly down a mysterious lane of dogwood and wild azalea. He rode thus without flourish into immortality. Stonewall Jackson never came back from the Wilderness.

But personages followed him there today, to tread again the narrow bypath which he trod with his valiant corps. Thousands clustered round the Bivouac stone where on the night of May 1, 1863, a moonlight council of war checkmated a powerful foe.

Chancellorsville was reenacted smartly, by United States Marines on the one side and on the other by cadets of Virginia Military Institute, supported by Fort Myer Cavalry. Twenty-five thousand persons filled and overflowed grandstands. Military observers of foreign nations, high dignitaries of the State and Nation and veterans of the great battle witnessed its portrayal in miniature.

From Washington there came Lieut. Gen. Friedrich von Boetticher, Military Attache of the German Embassy; Lieut. Gen. Vladimir Alexandrovitch Burzen and Maj. Gen. Vladimir Begunov, of the Soviet Union; Col. Tsi Ming Chow, of the Chinese Legation, and Lieut. Col. Vincenzo Coppola, Attache of Italy.

Gov. Peery of Virginia was there, a speaker, and R. Walton Moore, Federal Undersecretary of State, who introduced Dr. Douglas Southall Freeman, of Richmond, lecturer of the day. Frederic A. Delano, uncle of President Roosevelt, was an honor guest, as were Bishop Collins Denny, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South; Norman Call, president of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railway; Julian H. Hill, Richmond banker; Virginia Lieut. Gov. James H. Price and Adjt. Gen. Waller.

The pageant began at 11 a. m. when Dr. Freeman began to describe dispositions of the opposing armies on April 29, as they watched each other at Fredericksburg. He told of Gen. Joseph Hooker's decision to essay an enveloping movement to catch Lee's army in the jaws of a giant pincer. With this end in view, the Union commander sent 80,000 of his 120,000 men up the Rappahannock to the fords. But "Fighting Joe" made a serious mistake, as it later developed. He sent off his cavalry, under Stoneman, to undertake a raid against Confederate communications. This left him sightless and with insufficient protection for his flanks.

Gen. Lee permitted his opponent to cross the river unmolested. He

Senators Split As Bonus Fight Goes on Floor

Patman Backers Launch Attack on Both Vinson, Harrison Measures.

Split into factions by widely conflicting bonus plans, the Senate yesterday went through preliminary skirmishes on the soldiers' payment issue, to find itself faced with a triple bonus threat.

Aroused by tactical maneuvers that threatened to squeeze out a direct vote on the Patman bill, supporters of the inflationary House bonus measure launched a two-way attack.

Their fire was directed at both the Vinson bill, favored by the American Legion, on which the first Senate showdown will come, and the Harrison compromise, favorably reported by the Senate Finance Committee.

Under a complex parliamentary situation, both the Vinson and Harrison bills would have to be defeated before the Patman plan normally could come before the Senate. Charges that the two bills are "subterfuge" for delayed payment, and counter claims of a Presidential veto for anything but the

Reich Boasts Of Air Force Equal to Any

France, Soviet Sign Pact on War Aid; England to Build Planes.

The Situation Abroad.

Air Minister Goering declared Germany's air force "will always be as strong as any outside combination." He also revealed October 1 as the date to draft first recruits for the conscript army.

France and the Soviet signed a mutual military aid pact.

British leaders announced plans to expand the United Kingdom's air force. Winston Churchill asserted German supremacy in the air already existed.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, May 2.—Minister of Air Hermann Wilhelm Goering, declaring Germany's air force "will always be as strong as any outside combination," today revealed that the first recruits for Germany's new conscript army would be drafted October 1 to serve one year.

The disclosure was the first intimation from an official of Goering's rank as to when Adolf Hitler's "big army" program, announced by Der Fuehrer March 16, would get under way.

While Goering refused to disclose details of the conscription plans, it was assumed the first class would be composed of 21-year-olds, with special shorter training periods for others.

Race, Creed No Hindrance.

Goering, who spoke to the Foreign Press Association, revealed he was using technical skill to build up his air force wherever he found it, regardless of race or creed.

This was in sharp contrast to the recent statement by Minister of Propaganda Joseph Goebbels, who said Jews would not be accepted on the same footing as Aryans in the conscript army.

Speaking at length about the new air force, Goering said:

"Germany now has an aerial weapon so powerful that whoever attacks us will have an exceedingly difficult time in the air."

In the first flat statement of policy by any top-flight Nazi officials since the League of Nations council last month indicted Germany for rearming in violation of the Versailles treaty, Goering said the Reich would not return to Geneva until the league apologizes for that action.

Hitler to Tell Stand.

Earlier it became known Adolf Hitler, fuehrer of the Reich and Goering's superior, was preparing an important announcement for the near future—probably to be delivered before an extraordinary session of the Reichstag—covering the following points:

1. Germany's re-armament.
2. Her international policy.
3. Germany's proposals concerning restoration of colonies lost to her in the World War.
4. The possibility of the Reich's return to the league.
5. The Nazi government's attitude toward the Versailles, Locarno, Rhineland zone and other existing or proposed pacts

Goering, luncheon guest of the Foreign Press Association, said Germany's air strength lay in the superiority of men and materials. In an amazingly frank address, he mapped out the secret process by which the Reich, defying the Versailles treaty, secretly re-armed in the air. He appeared in full uniform, in company with his recent

Democrats Foresee Business Opposed to Roosevelt in 1936

By the Associated Press.

A triple-headed forecast that big business generally would line up against President Roosevelt in 1936, that the Republicans would nominate a conservative, but that the President would defeat him easily, came yesterday from within the Democratic high command.

Postmaster General Farley, who, with Emil Hurja, his assistant, recently completed a check of the political drift, stood sponsor for the two latter statements. He predicted, too, there would be no third party of "serious proportions."

Belief that there would be no third party also was echoed from the Republican side when former Senator James E. Watson, of Indiana, said he saw no signs of one.

"I don't imagine Senator Long will have one," Watson said. "He is just playing around. As for Father Coughlin, I don't think that his National Union for Social Justice is a political organization."

However, from St. Paul came word of a third party conference to be held here Saturday, called by a group including Howard Y. Williams, national Farmer-Labor Party organizer, and Representatives Ernest Lundeen, Minnesota; George Schneider and T. R. Amlie, Wisconsin, and Vito Marcantonio, New York.

Farm leaders, outstanding trade unionists, and at least four Representatives wil be among the 75 to 100 ultra-liberals who are to determine whether third party advocates should bide their time nationally until 1940, meanwhile concentrating on State movements and congressional races, or invade the national political field with a ticket in opposition to the Democrats and the Republicans.

Gov. Olson, of Minnesota, while publicly expressing belief the time is not ripe for a third party, has reserved an announcement as to his availability as a leader of an ultra-political faction.

A high ranking Democrat, who did not want to be quoted, made the assertion that party leaders expect big business generally to oppose both renomination and re-election of Mr. Roosevelt. Criticism by members of the Chamber of Commerce of the NRA, the Rayburn-Wheeler utility holding company bill and other New Deal programs and proposals were cited.

Authoritative Democratic spokesmen asserted that despite the prediction that President Roosevelt would be re-elected it had been decided to take no chances, but to tighten up the organization by keeping in close touch with State and local organizations.

Meanwhile, it became known that party leaders were looking to San Francisco as the Democratic convention city. The tentative overture reportedly was designed as a bid to bring the West definitely into the fold and combat the effect of Upton Sinclair's EPIC and the Townsend old-age pension plans.

Winchester, Va., May 2.—Amid a downpour of rain which soon turned into a veritable cloudburst, Mlle. Veverka, daughter of the Czechoslovakian Minister to the United States, Dr. Ferdinand Veverka, and Mme. Veverka was crowned Queen Shenandoah XII of the Apple Blossom Festival here this afternoon.

The coronation, climax of the first day of the fete, was witnessed by an estimated 15,000 persons, who peered from beneath umbrellas and folded newspapers as the ceremony was performed high upon the Handley High School esplanade.

With skies dripping intermittently throughout the day, festival officials determined to go through with the coronation as scheduled after a parade of 3,000 Frederick County school children, garbed in gay colors to represent the return of springtime, had been driven to cover by a thunderstorm this morning.

A detail of cadets from Massanutten Military Academy, Woodstock, Va., bugles blowing, heralded the approach of the royal party to the esplanade. After the singing of anthems by the Glee Club of Harrisonburg State Teachers College, Mlle. Veverka and her court, consisting of 33 princesses from girls' schools of Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia, Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia, were escorted to the throne by a color guard bearing the national emblems of the United States and Czechoslovakia. Attending the queen were the Misses Nancy Bowley and Fenton Nelson, maids of honor; little Elizabeth Steck Arthur, crown bearer, and Jane Cather and Dorothy Hawthorne, train bearers.

Ancient English and Anglo-Saxon rituals were used as Mlle. Veverka was inducted into office by both the church and the state. Col. B. M. Roszel, headmaster of Shenandoah Valley Academy, Winchester, was minister of the crown, with Father Robert E. Hannon, pastor of Sacred Heart Catholic Church, Winchester, as prelate of the church. The oath included investiture of the queen with a sceptre, a golden apple—the sign of plenty—and a key to the City of Winchester, carved from oak taken from historic Fort Loudoun here and presented by Dr. Charles R. Anderson, Mayor of Winchester.

Gov. H. G. Kump of West Virginia placed the time-honored, jewelled crown of the line of Shenandoah upon Mlle. Veverka's head as a tumultuous shout of "Long live the queen!" went up from the assembled throng.

Ascending to her golden throne, situated upon a dais from where she looked out upon surrounding apple orchards for miles, the queen

FERA Leaves Illinois Off Allotment List

Hopkins Carries OutThreat in 90 Million Grant to 41 States.

Unperturbed by the Senate's demand for information on relief allotments to States, FERA Administrator Harry L. Hopkins last night carried out his threat to withhold funds from Illinois unless and until that State puts $3,000,000 "on the line" each month.

As indications grew that the Senate Appropriations Committee will widen the scope of its inquiry beyond the original outline, Hopkins announced the allocation of approximately $90,000,000 to 41 States for May relief.

The omission of six States, besides Illinois, from the list of allotments was explained as due to the haste in preparing the grants and does not mean they will be cut off. Funds for Pennsylvania, however, were provided for only until May 15.

"I'm going to answer that promptly," was Hopkins' only comment on the Couzens resolution adopted by the Senate, which calls on him to disclose the formulas he has used in determining allotments to States.

The fact that Senator Carter Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, a sharp crtiic of relief expenditures, is chairman of the Appropriations Committee lent weight to the belief that the forthcoming investigation of FERA methods will be more than perfunctory.

Privately, members conceded the U. S. Deficit Nears 3 Billions, Far Under Roosevelt Estimate

By the Associated Press.

A deficit ranging steadily toward the three-billion-dollar mark for the first ten months of the fiscal year, accompanied by the apparent paradox of a decrease of $149,000,000 in the public debt during April, was shown yesterday in Treasury figures.

Observers noted that with only two months more left of the fiscal year an unprecedented burst of spending would be needed to bring the deficit figure to the $4,869,000,000 estimated by Mr. Roosevelt.

The April slash in the public debt, although unusual, was easily accounted for, however, by the fact that the Government has been paying out cash to redeem a sizable block of Liberty bonds and maturing short-term obligations instead of borrowing more money to meet them. The cash has come from the general fund.

Thus, April saw the public debt fall from $28,817,000,000 to $28,668,000,000. Meanwhile, the balance in the general fund, from which came the cash, dropped $511,000,000. It was drawn upon, too, for current expenditures.

The month's decline in outstanding obligations of course was but a nibble into the sum total of the debt. For the period from June 30, when the fiscal year began, it showed a net increase of $1,614,000,000.

Meanwhile, the deficit edged upward. When the books were closed on April 30, after the first ten months of the current fiscal year, the Government had spent $2,768,000,000 more than the sum of its revenues, despite the fact that the latter were well above the receipts of a year ago.

For the month of April it received $227,000,000 as compared with $182,000,000 in April, 1934. For the ten months, revenues were $3,090,000,000, well over the $2,487,000,000 added up on the credit side a year ago.

Expenditures this year aggregated $2,965,000,000 for what the Treasury terms "general" or "ordinary" outlays covering the routine cost of running the Government departments, and $2,892,000,000 for emergency purposes, a grand total of $5,859,000,000.

For the first ten months of the last fiscal year the totals were $2,591,000,000 for general expenditures, $3,230,000,000 for emergency purposes, a total of $5,821,000,000.

Committee Indorses NRA Exetension by 13 to 4.

Reed Opens Case In Test on Wages

Decision More Vital to Set-Up Than 'Hot Oil Ruling.'.

By Elliott Thurston.

NRA fought for its life yesterday in the Senate and Supreme Court.

A bipartisan coalition in the Senate Finance Committee voted, 13 to 4, to report favorably the compromise resolution extending the NRA to next April, with price fixing banned and intrastate business exempted.

Solicitor General Stanley Reed late in the day opened the Government's argument before the high court in the selected test case primarily involving hour and wage provisions.

While the Senate resolution exempts intrastate business, nobody ventures to define what is and what is not intrastate business. That issue is up, in a case involving the poultry code, in the Supreme Court. In this case, the Government argues that fixing of wages and hours is within the scope of the so-called interstate commerce clause of the Constitution because wages and hours in the poultry business "affect" prices and hence movements in interstate commerce.

The defendants, the A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corporation, not only contend that wages and hours are purely intrastate—as the Circuit Court of Appeals held—but that Congress, in the NIRA, went even further in delegating its powers than it did in the famous "hot-oil" act, recently held invalid by the Supreme Court.

Issue in Doubt.

Lawyers, Senators, everybody was ready to guess what the court would do in the gold cases. But the prophets are stumped now as to what the NRA's fate will be, either in the Senate or court. If the court decides the test case before the Senate acts to extend the NRA—which expires June 16—it would serve as a guide to the new legislation.

Under a fire of exploratory questions yesterday from the bench, Reed was none too much at ease, especially when pressed on whether Congress had defined what it meant by "fair competition," which bears on whether Congress in NIRA tried to delegate even broader, vaguer powers than in the "hot-oil" law at which the court balked. Justice Stone seemed to have Reed boxed by getting him to say first that industry decided what was fair competition.

But, as Justice Stone demurred, suppose industry decided that what was fair competition was, in fact, harmful to interstate commerce? So Reed countered that the President would be the judge. Finally, he fell back on the argument that the President in turn would have to apply tests set forth in the NRA act—that is, whether codes would effectuate the purposes set forth in the act.

All of this sounds highly legalistic, but it is vital. For a court which lately spiked the "hot oil" act as too broad a delegation of power by Congress could hardly be expected to sanction an equally broad and vague grant in NRA.

Reform Measures Hit by Chamber

'No Reason to Follow Will of President,' Declares Sibley.

By Felix Bruner.

Three hours after the Chamber of Commerce of the United States had adopted resolutions harshly criticizing most of the New Deal recovery measures, a group of business men called at the White House yesterday afternoon and told President Roosevelt they favored NRA extension and the Administration's social security legislation. Both measures had been condemned in the chamber resolutions.

The group consisted of 23 members of the business advisory council of the Department of Commerce. Most of them were members of the Chamber of Commerce. Included was Henry I. Harriman, retiring president of the Chamber, who presided at the convention meeting at which New Deal measures were condemned.

"No Politics," Says Kendall.

Following his conference with President Roosevelt, H. P. Kendall, chairman of the advisory council, declared that "there is no politics back of this report."

"We are here to uphold the President's hand in the fight against the depression," he said. "Certain of our members are members of the Chamber of Commerce, but we are not spokesmen for the chamber or any other organization."

Secretary Roper, who accompanied the delegation, said the committee had indorsed in a general way the social security program. He also said that most of the members of the committee were members of the Chamber of Commerce and added that "they were delighted to tell the President they were for his program."

A social security report presented to the President by the council members will be sent to Secretary Perkins and is expected to be made public today. The report on NRA asked for a two-year extension and recommended provisions in the Administration bill.

"Time for Review."

Others in the group were E. T. Stannard, F. B. Davis, jr., James D. Francis, Delancey Kountze, Morris D. Leeds, Robert L. Lund, Gerard Swope, Sidney K. Weinberg, Winthrop W. Aldrich, Charles A. Cannon, H. B. Deupree, Gano Dunn, R. G. Elbert, Lincoln Filene, A. P. Greensfelder, Lew Hahn, Henry H. Heimann, William A. Julian, George H. Mead and James H. Rand.

The stand of the chamber of commerce against Administration measures was characterized by Harper Sibley, its newly elected president, as "an honest difference of opinion." Declaring that the business emergency has passed, he said it is "time to review the emergency measures."

"There is no reason why we should follow the will of the President," he added.

Far from "following the will of the President," the resolutions either condemned entirely or severely criticized the present national industrial recovery act, social security legislation, securities control legislation, proposed amendments to the banking act, the Wagner labor disputes bill, the utilities holding company bill, amendments to the agricultural adjustment act, and Government interference in business.

Reserved for future action were resolutions on the cotton textile problem, on emergency relief activities, and on Government loans, in addition to other resolutions

McGrady Holds Peace Session In Auto Strike

General Motors Closes 4 More Plants; 26,000 Now Affected.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, May 2.—Edward F. McGrady, Assistant Secretary of Labor, brought labor leaders and executives of General Motors Corporation together today to discuss a basis for negotiations in the Toledo, Ohio, Chevrolet plant strike, spearhead of a situation which affected 26,000 workers in eight cities and 15 plants by a strike or shutdown.

McGrady, ace conciliator of the Department of Labor, discussed the situation with Francis J. Dillon, American Federation of Labor organizer, as soon as Dillon arrived from Washington. He went then to the office of William F. Knudsen, executive vice president of General Motors, and later all were closeted in conference at Knudsen's office.

The three avoided any statement relative to the Toledo plant strike. Dillon explaining he had not had time to present fully the union's demands, and McGrady saying he would have no statement at least until after he had conferred with Dillon and Knudsen.

Effects of the Toledo strike spread today to Kansas City and St. Louis as Chevrolet and Fisher Body company plants closed in each city for lack of parts. Transmission assemblies appeared the main shortage, since the Toledo plant manufacturned a heavy percentage of these for all Chevrolet units.

Coincident with the conference in Detroit, M. E. Coyle, president of the Chevrolet company, announced at Flint, Mich., that the company's plants at Flint, Saginaw and Bay City would remain open regardless of the situation in units elsewhere.

The Flint plant, employing 14,000 workers, manufactures motors and sheet metal for use in 12 other plants. Coyle said parts and materials turned out in these plants would be stored until assembly lines began moving again.

Toledo, Ohio, May 2 (AP).—A threat to advocate violence entered the automobile strike picture today.

Reports that the Chevrolet Motor Co. is taking steps to manufacture transmissions at Muncie, Ind., instead of in its Toledo plant, now closed by a walkout, inspired the threat by Fred Schwake, business agent of the Toledo Automobile Workers Union.

Schwake told a meeting of striking union workers here that if Chevrolet attempts to put the plan in operation, he would advocate demolishment of the Muncie plant.

A call for volunteers to go to Muncie "if needed," brought offers from 75 of the 300 men at the meeting, Schwake said.

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Perkins said last night the automobile strike situation "looks much better" and expressed hope a settlement would be reached today.

She made this comment after a telephone talk with Edward F. McGrady, First Assistant Secretary of Labor, who had spent the day in Detroit with W. S. Knudsen, General Motors vice president, and Francis J. Dillon, American Federation of Labor organizer in the auto industry.

William Green, Federation president, meantime blamed the strike on the Wolman auto labor board and the General Motors Corporation's "denial" of "rights guaranteed" workers by the auto code.

Miss Perkins said that "something in the form of a proposal" had been devised at McGrady's conference yesterday and that "Mr. Knudsen is considering it." She added:

"They apparently had a friendly and a reasonable day."

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, May 2.—The Baltimore assembling plant of the Chevrolet Motor Co. will be forced to close down soon because of lack of parts due to the strike at the Toledo (Ohio) plant, officials said tonight.

Earlier a telegram had been received here from M. E. Coyle, president and general manager of the Chevrolet company, announcing discontinuance of operations at the Baltimore plant. Company officials here, however, said enough parts were on hand to allow operations for a short time.

The local plant employs about 1,500 men.

Between You and Me

Great American Thirst at Stake; No Works Politics, Vows Farley, Never Smiling; Out Goes Lobbyist.

By Raymond Clapper

THE precarious future of NRA recalls to mind something that most persons have forgotten. That is the fact that Federal control over the liquor industry, except in the collection of taxes, is exercised by authority of NIRA.

If by any chance Congress fails to extend NRA after June 16, the bridle with which the Federal Government has held the liquor industry under control will be taken off. Or if the authority of NRA is materially curtailed, Congress may by the same stroke seriously limit the Government's regulation of the liquor industry.

The Federal Alcohol Administration was set up quickly and under the NRA emergency powers when repeal became effective. NRA, offering the broadest latitude of Federal authority, was a convenient vehicle for carrying the Federal Government into immediate control over the liquor industry.

This emergency law also enabled the Federal Government to skirt around constitutional problems since the repeal of the eighteenth amendment gave Congress no authority to legislate except to protect dry States and to exercise its general powers over interstate commerce.

Thus, through the broad powers of NRA, the FACA was set up to exercise the powers of a Federal liquor commission in the absence of permanent legislation. For instance, the distillers' code begins with a preamble which states that whereas Congress has not had the opportunity to enact liquor legislation since repeal of the eighteenth amendment, etc.

2. Prevention of improper trade practices. FACA stops chiseling, racketeering, secret rebating and subsidizing of employes, abuses which did much to bring the pre-prohibition liquor business into bad repute.

3. Prevention of excess capacity. The purpose was to prevent ruinous overproduction with inevitable business losses, and to check the cost to the Government which would have resulted from inspection of numerous small plants whose tax payments would have been insufficient to defray the cost of Federal inspection.

4. Protection of State antiliquor laws.

5. Limitation of bulk sales to check bootlegging.

6. Price control or declaring ineffective posted prices which are oppressively high or destructively low.

FACA exercises these powers through code authorities and through its permit system which carries the power of life and death over distillers, rectifiers, brewers, wine makers, wholesalers and importers. It rules in all branches of the industry except the retail trade.

Thus it is seen that any alteration of NRA powers may seriously affect the Federal Government's liquor-control system. That is one practical consideration. Another is the liquor business is now being regulated under an authority which, if the lower courts have spoken correctly in other uses of NRA powers, is exceedingly questionable. Thus far FACA has been able to avoid any showdown court tests. This has been due partly to the wise and careful work of Administrator Choate and partly to the inclination of FACA to duck when a question comes up. Usually it finds a way to mollify a particularly obstreperous complainant.

But the question is bound to arise sooner or later as to whether, if the Government intends to exercise such control permanently, the matter should not be threshed out in Congress and be handled through permanent and specific legislation. Its present authority rests upon such a flimsy foundation and is of such uncertain tenure that those in the industry do not know what to expect from month to month. It is government by executive order carried to the extreme.

Administrator Choate appeared before the Senate Finance Committee and sought to have the proposed NRA extension act modified to create specific authority for FACA and to incorporate the six liquor industry codes into law so that uncertainty would be removed. Chairman Pat Harrison said he didn't think it was necessary. So they'll go on with executive order Government instead.

Postmaster General Farley is backing the proposal to give a Federal subsidy of $2,000,000 to the transpacific airline about to be established. Part of this money will come back through postal receipts.

The Pan-American Airways now handle over their Central and South American lines 7.76 per cent of all first-class mail exchanged with the United States. Postal authorities figure that at the start the Pacific route may not handle more than 4 per cent with gains after the service becomes more firmly established.

On the basis of a 60-cent rate to China, with proportionate rates to Hawaii, and Manila, which is the rate favored by the Pan-American company, the estimated revenue would be at least $300,000 a year.

Possibly the rate might be fixed higher, say $1 per letter to China, 50 cents Hawaii and 75 cents to Manilla. However, postal authorities are afraid that rate might be prohibitive and bring them into conflict with the law of diminishing returns.

Send-a-Dime Letters Bring A Warning From Cummings

Number of Washingtonians Asked to Join Get-Rich-Quick Scheme.

The send-a-dime chain letter craze, which has assumed vast proportions in the Midwest, received local recognition yesterday when Attorney General Cummings warned his employes to have nothing to do with the scheme—not on official stationery anyway.

At the same time, it was learned that a goodly number of the chain letters have filtered into the Capital.

"I have seen only one of them," said Postmaster William M. Mooney. "We have received no orders from the department to curb the practice."

It is impossible to determine how much send-a-dime correspondence has been received here, but reports of a number of Washingtonians being asked to participate were confirmed.

One of the letters was turned over to the Attorney General yesterday, bearing the names of three of his woman employes. The fact that departmental stationery was used caused Mr. Cummings to issue his warning.

Briefly, the idea of the scheme is this: The addressee receives a letter containing six names. He scratches out the top one and places his own at the bottom of the list. To the person whose name he erases he sends a dime. Then he makes five copies of the corrected list and sends them to five friends "to whom you wish prosperity."

If the chain is unbroken, each participant is supposed eventually to receive 15,625 letters containing a dime a piece. That would make $1,562.50.

The solicitor of the Postoffice Department has ruled that the system is a violation of Federal lottery laws but postal officials say they are powerless to put a stop to it. It's too difficult to make an arrest.

Dillinger, the Swan, Favors All by Dying

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 2.—Dillinger, the outlaw swan, is dead.

The soft, white body of the terror of the Bronx Botanical Gardens, was found today in a clump of bushes by the shore of the lake he had dominated for five years.

Lee Crandall, curator of birds, said none of the birds will miss Dillinger.

"He was always looking for trouble, and his rages were unpredictable," he said. "He terrorized the lake, breaking up nests and pillaging broods of young ducks. And his fights with the other swans were bitter and bloody.

"Dillinger couldn't even keep a wife. We gave him two, and they both left him flat—couldn't live with him."

Be Balky, Bank Bill Foe's Plea To Democrats

Hoeppel Assails Measure as Leaders Keep House From Adjourning.

House Democrats were likened to donkeys yesterday and urged to balk by opponents of the Administration banking bill.

So many rebellious members clamored to speak against the measure that majority leaders decided to keep the House in session tomorrow instead of adjourning tonight over the week-end. A final vote appeared a week off.

Representative Hoeppel (Democrat), California, assailed the bill as against the interests of the people.

"The donkey," he shouted, "is the emblem of the Democratic party. The 313 Democratic donkeys walk in line just like they had no heads of their own. The President pulls the jerk line.

Be Balky, Says Hoeppel.

"If we would only exercise the prerogative of the donkey and be balky once in a while we'd get somewhere. We need courage to stand on our own feet."

Representative Fiesinger, Ohio, another Democratic foe of the bill, described it as "sugar water to make castor oil not taste so bad" and charged the powers it would confer on the Federal Reserve Board were largely negative.

"To cure this depression," he cried, "we've got to raise commodity prices to the debt level."

Fiesinger contended new paper eligibility provisions in the measure would "fill up these banks" with assets "that are not liquid" and that would be found to be "frozen in the next national emergency."

Dingell Advocates Plan.

One of the few advocates of the bill to raise their voices as critics had their day, Representative Dingell (Democrat), of Michigan, insisted it would be "better to have the Government control our banking system than to have bankers manipulate it in their own interest."

A plea for establishment of a national central bank patterned after the Bank of North Dakota was made by Representative Lemke, Farmer-Laborite of that State. Such an institution, he said, could "save $1,000,000,000 a year in interest" by taking bonds off the open market.

"We ought to listen to farmers before we pass a bank bill," he added. The banker is the last man in the world to consult. All he knows about money is how to reach out and get it."

Waving a dollar bill overhead, Lemke shouted:

"It doesn't make any difference what's back of this piece of paper except the credit of the Government. It doesn't have to be backed by gold.

"Why, there was a time when we had sea shells, mulberry leaves, tobacco and whisky for money in this country."

Confession Lists 7 in Bremer Crime

By the Associated Press.

St. Paul, May 2.—A statement by a confessed associate, introduced by the Government today in the trial of Edward G. Bremer's alleged kidnapers, named Arthur (Doc) Barker and fugitive Alvin Karpis as two of the actual abductors.

The 17-word confession by Harold Alderton, in whose Bensenville (Ill.) home, the banker was held by the gang for 21 days, was read to the jury by Federal District Attorney George Sullivan.

It linked with the crime in addition to Barker, a defendant, and Karpis, current public enemy No. 1, Byron Bolton who pleaded guilty when the trial opened April 15; Elmer Farmer, Bensenville tavern keeper, a defendant; William Weaver and Harry Campbell, both at large, and Fred Goetz, alias George Ziegler, killed by gangsters in Chicago after the Bremer kidnaping.

Wife of Bergdoll Arrives for Plea

She Will Ask Roosevelt to Pardon Draft Evader.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 2.—Listed as a woman without a country, Mrs. Grover Cleveland Bergdoll arrived from Germany today to seek a presidential pardon for her draft-dodger husband.

Asserting Bergdoll desires to return to the United States and reclaim his $800,000 brewing fortune, which was seized by the Government when he fled the country, his blonde young wife said:

"His exile of 15 years seems to me to be penalty enough, if he has done wrong. He wants to come home."

As she stepped off the liner Washington with her four small children, Attorney General Cummings declared in Washington Bergdoll would receive "no clemency from the Department of Justice."

The question of clemency would be one for the War Department and the President, the Attorney General asserted.

Blackwelder to Seek 'Staphs' Beetle Data

Dr. Richard E. Blackwelder will go to the West Indies to study the staphylinid beetle, under the Walter Rathbone Bacon traveling scholarship, the Smithsonian Institution announced yesterday.

Now engaged in entomological work at the National Museum, Dr. Blackwelder will comb 25 West Indian islands for new species of the little beetles, which comprise one of the largest and least known animal families on earth. After completing his collection, he will study specimens in the British Museum.

"Staphs," as they are known, are found in ant hills, some of them serving the ants as domestic animals, so to speak. They are distinguishable by their short wing covers, although nearly all have large wings. Some are classified as pests, others as beneficial insects.

England Moves To Add Planes; Hits Arms Race

Warns She'll Hold Rank in Air, Asks Reich to Join Peace Moves.

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

London, May 2.—Great Britain, pleading for an end to Europe's headlong armaments race, today warned neighboring nations she means to keep her air force the equal of any.

A ringing assertion by Winston Churchill, fiery Conservative, that German air superiority already exists featured the debate that followed upon Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald's announcement the government "already is taking steps" toward expanding British air strength.

Just what the expansion program involved MacDonald did not reveal, but informed sources said earlier the government stood ready to spend $25,000,000 in addition to the $105,000,000 already provided in this year's air estimates.

Plunged Into Race.

The packed House of Commons was tensely expectant as MacDonald, the old fighter for peace, made the eagerly awaited statement on foreign policy that launched debate on foreign affairs and set Britain squarely in the middle of the armaments race.

Stern and conciliatory by turns toward Germany, the prime minister said unequivocally:

"We propose to put our power of defense into a state which will enable our people to feel that they are protected."

He assailed Germany's recent moves to build up her land, sea and air forces, as he did last week in his National Labor Party's official news letter, and said:

"Under no circumstances would we accept any position of inferiority to whatever air force may be raised by Germany in the future."

In the galleries, listening closely, were the diplomats of many nations and the prime ministers of the dominions, who yesterday assured the government they would back to the limit any legitimate British effort to keep peace.

Many Voice Anxiety.

Spokesmen for all parties participated in the debate that followed, each testifying to anxiety over the increasing evidence that Europe now is fairly in the midst of an armament race.

McDonald, announcing Anglo-German naval talks once postponed ostensibly because of the royal jubilee celebrations in Britain would be held shortly, also disclosed that his government would send an observer to the Rome conference in June intended to establish central European security.

A common front of Britain, France and Italy in the cause of peace was proclaimed by the prime minister, but he left the door open for Germany's cooperation.

Despite Germany's newest violation of the Versailles Treaty in launching submarine construction, MacDonald said "we are still prepared, without conceding in any way the right to disregard treaty provisions, to receive the German representatives in London."

Of the submarine disclosure, he said:

"It could not have been imagined that it would be of no concern to us."

U. S. to Be Kept Posted.

The United States and Japan, whose representatives recently conferred here with Britain's on naval matters, will be kept informed of the progress of the Anglo-German conversations, as will France and Italy, because, MacDonald said, "we have nothing to hide and have no intention of making any secret and private agreement with anybody."

The prime minister made an impassioned appeal to the Reich to join new efforts toward disarmament. He said:

"At this moment, before we have gone very far, the British government urges with all the influence it can command that a halt be called and that the powers limit their air arms within well-defined bounds to be fixed by free negotiation.

"I commend this, if I may venture to do so, and I make bold to do so, to the German government * * *

"I repeat that our policy is not aimed at military alliances, but at the widest cooperation. The present good understanding between France and Italy and ourselves is a guarantee of peace. It challenges no one.

"Every other nation which contemplates peace will be welcomed into its free companionship."

Police Boys Club To Have Outing

A feature of the afternoon will be a baseball game between the Boys Club team and a team of Colmar Manor boys. Among those who will be present at the park are Superintendent of Police E. W. Brown and Mrs. Brown, Mrs. John Allan Dougherty, Robert Fleming, William Shelton and Gordon Leech. Morris Fox, assistant director of the club, is in charge of the outing.

France, Russia Initial Treaty For Mutual Aid

Pact Aimed to Curb Reich Calls for Speedy War Moves If Needed.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, May 2.—The diplomats of France and Russia tonight signed a pact designed to send the soldiers of either nation on the march in defense of the other under certain circumstances.

The long-talked-of Franco-Russian accord, described by some as a virtual military alliance of prewar vintage, was signed by Foreign Minister Pierre Laval and Ambassador Vladimir Potemkin of Soviet Russia.

The French insist it is not a military alliance because it was constructed to parallel obligations under the league and does not conflict with Locarno or other treaties designed to keep the peace.

The accord, conceived after Germany's announcement of conscription on March 16, is designed to protect the signatories in the event of a German assault on the frontiers. It aids each country in case of "unprovoked attack" by any other European power, even though the agggessor is outside of the League of Nations. Germany is outside of the league.

Five Major Points.

The five articles of the pact provide the following, it was learned:

1. Immediate consultation under Article 10 of the league covenant in case of an attack.

2. Immediate aid under the covenant's Article 15 if the league is unable to reach a unanimous decision.

3. A pledge by France and Russia to join in military, economic and financial measures under Articles 16 and 17 of the covenant in case of an unprovoked attack, even by a nation outside the league.

4. A declaration that the pact does not free the signatories of their obligations to Geneva.

5. The duration of the pact is fixed to a specified time and applies only against European nations.

Characterizing the document as "a new step forward in Franco-Soviet relations," Potemkin said:

"It is not limited to tightening the bonds uniting the two countries. This accord has a much more general scope. It may rightfully be considered a particularly important share in the organization of European security."

Peace Held Aim.

Laval expressed great satisfaction, saying:

"We had only one concern—bringing about participation by our two countries in an organization of security in Europe. We voluntarily remained within the framework of the League of Nations, just as we were careful from the beginning of our negotiations not to exclude any country from our diplomatic enterprise. It is for peace that we labored."

At the first sign of "aggression" the two nations agree to consult each other.

Speed in combatting an air attack is one of the aims of the accord. The two powers, under the agreement, would ask a hastily called League of Nations council to consider the "aggression." The nations then would go into immediate action if the league failed to reach a unanimous decision.

Thus, a counter-attack might be carried out within 48 hours. The desire for speed was reflected in the negotiations for the pact, which lasted only three weeks, despite several hitches.

While their "military, economic and financial measures" would be decided within the league if possible, the pact provides that France and Russia vote together at Geneva as they did in condemning German rearmament.

Avoids Japanese Aspect.

France won for herself the provision limiting the application of the pact to the European nations. This obviates the possibility of France becoming embroiled in a possible Russo-Japanese squabble.

This point, and also the one put forth by Russia making assistance more automatic, several times threatened to hold up the agreement.

The accord virtually creates a four-power front against Germany, since it binds Russia with France, which holds guarantees of England and Italy under the Locarno Treaty.

The agreement is regarded by the French as the beginning of a collective security system which was decided upon at Stresa and as a wall around the Reich.

The Danubian pact remains to be negotiated at Rome next month, with air assistance pacts, general and bilateral, to follow, as well as the mutual assistance pact between Czechoslovakia and Russia.

Reich Hemmed In.

In this manner all Europe, including Greece and Turkey through the Balkan Entente, and perhaps even the Baltic nations, would be tied together by interlocking systems against Nazi interference in Austria and the use of Germany's new arms for war elsewhere.

French officials, like Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald of Britain, expressed the hope that Germany will enter a security system and not isolate herself.

Poland has been wavering between Germany and Russia, but Laval hopes to win Warsaw back to the side of France. Poland and France now have a military alliance which benefits from a clause in the Franco-Russian pact confirming previous alliances of both nations.

Laval hopes to sway Marshal Joseph Pilsudski when the former stops off at Warsaw on his way to Moscow. He leaves for Moscow next Thursday and will stop at Warsaw the following two days.

Mother of 14 Up Front In Maternity Contest

Toronto, May 2 (AP).—Mrs. Ambrose Harrison bolstered her position as a leading contender in Toronto's $500,000 maternity sweepstake today by giving birth to a boy, her fourteenth child.

Members of the family said the child was her eighth since Charles Millar died in October, 1926, leaving some $500,000 to the Toronto mother who would bring the greatest number of children into the world in the next 10 years.

Mrs. Harrison's addition put her three behind the claims of Mrs. Lilly Kenny, who says she has had 11 children registered in the last nine years. Mrs. Grace Bagnato, mother of 23 children, asserts nine of hers have been born since October, 1926.

Fleet Awaiting Order to Move Against Enemy

By the Associated Press.

Aboard U. S. S. Pennsylvania, San Francisco Harbor, May 2.—Powerful concentrations of warships in San Francisco Bay and in Puget Sound took positions for a dash to sea tonight for the most far flung phase of six weeks' maneuvers in the North Pacific by 153 craft of the United States Navy.

Between the Pacific Coast and the Hawaiian Islands other forces were speeding to secret rendezvous somewhere in the triangle embracing 5,000,000 square miles between Hawaii and Alaska, and Midway Island, 1,340 miles west of Hawaii, and the Pacific Coast.

These forces were believed to include a strong detachment of Marines and Marine aircraft squadrons aboard a carrier; the world's most powerful submarine unit—Division 12 of the world cruising undersea craft—and three divisions of the smaller S-type submarines from the Hawaiian Islands.

Admiral Harris Lanning commands the 40 ships of the main battle force in San Francisco Bay. This embraces 12 dreadnaughts, aircraft carriers (including the new Ranger, which is on maneuvers for the first time), heavy cruisers and light cruisers, destroyers and training ships.

Included in this powerful fleet is the Pennsylvania, flagship of the United States fleet, with Admiral Joseph Mason Reeves, the commander in chief of all the forces, who is chief umpire of the maneuvers.

Vice Admiral Arthur Japy Hepburn commands the fast striking force of heavy cruisers, including five of the newest in the Navy, aircraft squadrons, light cruisers, destroyers and train ships.

Man Robs Laundry.

A lone white man last night held up a branch of the Frazee-Potomac Laundry at 2526 Fourteenth street northwest and escaped with $56. Louise Kenney, manager of the branch, said the bandit told her to keep quiet for five minutes after he left.

Troops Guard Island Capital From Radicals

the Sakdalistas were plotting to attack Manila last midnight. This information and the fact that communications were being cut, caused officials to place strong constabulary details at trouble centers.

The move of the constabulary caused the plotters to disperse in the Manila area, most of the trouble thus far coming from the vicinity of Santa Rosa.

Leader Believed in Japan.

Benigno Ramos, Sakdal leader, left months ago and is believed to be in Japan. A huge crowd cheered him as he sailed on his mission.

In Manila, when the warning came, the constabulary at the local Gagalangin Barracks, largest in the islands, was promptly mobilized.

An exclusive interview was obtained with G. B. Francisco, chief of staff of the constabulary. He said:

"We received word from Mantinlupa that radicals were concentrating there. We rushed there with troops and found everything peaceful.

"Then we were informed that gunfire had occurred in Santa Rosa. We proceeded there and the Sakdalistas fired on us as we entered the town. The leaders were arrested there. Additional arrests are expected.

"Later the town was plunged into darkness. Roads were jammed by trucks whose drivers fled when the first shots were fired.

"The uprising was long planned. It was inspired by Communists, most of the participants being merely ignorant peasants.

"Fifty constabulary men at present are controlling things quietly in that sector."

Populace Excited.

United States troops stationed in the islands took up posts in Manila to protect Army property. The populace became excited when reports were circulated that the Sakdalistas intended to invade the capital.

Army officers emphasized that the troops would not intervene unless asked to do by Acting Governor Hayden.

Hayden left Baguio several days ago to inspect the mountain provinces. He is believed to be in Bontok. Governor General Frank Murphy is in the United States.

The fighting apparently centered in Rizal, Laguna and Bulacan provinces.

Telephone wires north and south of the capital were cut. Communication with the summer capital at Baguio was by radio.

The Filipino government under Acting Governor Hayden appeared determined to use further armed force, if necessary, to rout the Sakdalistas.

More than a score of persons described as Communists but believed part of the Sakdalista uprising have been rounded up. The fleeing insurgents abandoned 15 automobiles and took to the jungle.

Taxes Protested.

The American-trained Philippine constabulary reported it had the situation in hand. A Filipino detail was rushed to Marilao, in Bulacan Province.

The United States Navy reported its telegraph lines between Cavite and Los Banos had been cut. Patrols were dispatched to repair the break.

The Sakdal Party has been campaigning in the provinces for rejection of the Philippine constitution. In recent demonstrations, the natives have paraded with red flags, protesting against high taxes. Their chief contention politically is that the "transition period" of ten years before full independence will strangle the poor in the islands.

Highways Patrolled.

In recent weeks, semiviolent Sakdalista mass meetings have been held in Candaba, Pampanga, San Antonio, Cabiao, Capan, Nueva Ecija and Manila, itself.

In Tayabas province, Sakdalistas recently were accused of plotting to overthrow the government and assassinate Quezon. He is in New York.

The party's strength is among the agrarians of central Luzon, main island in the archipelago on which Manila is located.

Manila remained quiet early today. Native police patrolled the down town streets with riot guns. Trouble as near as San Juan Rizal, 5 miles away, was reported, giving rise to fresh rumors of attack.

Guards were posted over all gun and ammunition stores. All highways into Manila were heavily patrolled.

Goering Brags Of Air Power; Draft Set Oct. 1

bride, the former Emmy Sonnemann.

Air re-armament, Goering said, "was accomplished in a manner so original and so unique that without a knowledge of the facts in the case it would be hard to believe.

"We proceeded along entirely new lines. I have declined to re-arm slowly and gradually because then there would have existed the danger, in the event of difficulties, that our weapon might not have been ready.

"I therefore first exhausted all technical and industrial possibilities to the very utmost, a fact which enabled us then to create our air weapon with lightning-like speed.

"When some newspapermen, at a time before we acknowledged the existence of an air fleet, were writing about sounds they heard in the forest they were not far wrong. We were, indeed, manufacturing parts in secret places."

Goering declined to say just how big the new air force is, but asserted "it is not as big as foreign countries picture to themselves."

"The decisive thing is not the number of planes," he said, "but their quality—not the number of fliers but their qualities, character and ability.

"Strong as Any."

"If you ask how strong the Reich is in the air," he continued, "I reply it will always be as strong as any outside combination, for or against peace, will be * * *

'I have suffered a great deal in past years through having to play hide-and-seek in the matter of an air force. A year ago I could say with good conscience that we had nothing * * * Since others refused to disarm, we were forced to arm also.

"It depends upon others to determine how big Germany's air force is. If others scrap theirs, we'll scrap ours, but they must be honest about it and be prepared to deal on the basis of strictest equality."

The air minister declared Germany would join "any air convention, provided Germany's security was safeguarded."

Asserting "we have nothing more to hide, except purely technical details which every government naturally keeps to itself," he continued:

"We want peace. We do not want to be provoked into breaking it. We seek no adventure, but only want an equal status.

"Germany has done the greatest service to world peace by rearming, because a defenseless nation in the heart of Europe must inevitably be a constant temptation to others."

Talking informally to newspapermen, Goering said Germany demanded air parity with France, but not with Russia, and declared Germany was buying air defense inventions whether the inventor be "heathen, Christian or Jew," because "inventions do not have grandmothers whose race must be probed."

He said the air program did not contemplate construction of Zeppelins or aircraft carriers, the former because he regarded them as too expensive and too easily destroyed and the latter because Germany's purposes were purely defensive.

The air minister denied existence of any plans to send troops into the demilitarized Rhineland, saying, however, that an increased police force was needed there.

Germany's airmen, Goering said, total "a couple of thousand, not 10,000, as has been claimed," and they are not walking about arrogantly with chips on their shoulders.

The day is over, he insisted, when other nations could grant equality with Germany. "We now have equality because we took it," he said.

Asked whether he would equip the planes with American motors, Goering replied, "We bought some American motors at the beginning and put them on our planes, but that was only at the start, when we had none of our own manufactured."

Murphy Calls Outbreak Of Minor Importance

By the United Press.

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., May 2.—Governor General Frank Murphy today characterized the Sakdalista outbreaks in the Philippines as of provincial character, and not a major political challenge to the fulfillment of the present independence act.

Growth of the Communist movement in the islands, he said, has been shown by recent strikes in cigar factories at Manila and elsewhere.

The Sakdalistas have no great strength and are not as large a problem as the Communists in some large American cities, he said, adding, however, that the problem would not be ignored.

Points of reported outbreaks, the Governor said, were in local agrarian and home industries localities, giving the movement a provincial aspect. The Sakdalistas have only two seats in the Philippine House of Representatives.

Chamber Flays New Deal; Roper Group Differs

Advisory Commission Members Back Social Bill, NRA Extender

Reform Measures Are Hit as President Sibley Sees 'No Reason to Follow' Roosevelt; Session Is Adjourned.

ot so closely related to the Administration program.

The Chamber of Commerce pronouncements, coming just as preliminaries of the next presidential campaign are getting under way, are expected to constitute something of a guide for political opponents of the Administration.

At the same time, a high Administration spokesman said yesterday that "business men never really were for the Administration at any time." He added that he expected them to be against the Administration next year and that Democratic votes would "come from the plain people." He predicted an overwhelming Roosevelt victory.

Not Reactionary, Says Sibley.

Sibley described the resolutions as "very forward looking" and declared he did not feel they were reactionary. He said the chamber of commerce had "simply expressed to the Administration in a polite way its differences of opinion."

The new chamber president, who was a schoolmate of President Roosevelt at Groton and who was in Harvard at the same time as the President, said he expected to take the resolutions to the White House some time next week and that he hoped there would be free discussion between representatives of the Government and of the chamber.

"When there are honest differences of opinion there must be free expression," he said. "The Administration is for the whole people. So is the chamber of commerce. I hope that through open discussion we can arrive at a solution."

He said the resolutions did not represent so much opposition to New Deal laws as a feeling that too much had been attempted by the Government in too short a time.

"We question the Government's haste," he said, "and also its methods—to some extent."

Will "Campaign."

Describing the business situation, he said:

"It looks to me as if the business patient is very healthy. He seems to have a lot of pep. They say that a convalescent is sometimes vociferous."

Sibley said the chamber of commerce expected to "campaign" for its views.

At the sesion yesterday morning the discussion was created by the fact that President Roosevelt had sent no message to the convention. Last year he sent a message asking co-operation and condemning business men "who cry 'wolf.'" Two years ago he attended the dinner which closed the convention.

Invited to Dinner.

At the White House it was said that President Rosoevelt had not been asked to send a message. It was said he had been invited to attend the dinner Wednesday night, but that he had declined because of the pressure of business and because he did not wish to add to statements he made in a radio speech last Sunday night.

These statements were confirmed by both Sibley and Henry I. Harriman, retiring president of the Chamber, both of whom were White House callers last week.

At the White House it was added that President Roosevelt was displeased with the temper of some of the speeches at the convention.

With two exceptions, all the resolutions prepared by a special committee were adopted without opposition. The exceptions were resolutions on social security legislation and on standards for highways and vehicles. It has been a number of years since there has been any opposition from the floor to resolutions proposed by the committee.

Ask Pension Postponement

The social security resolution as originally drawn asked that all legislation except that designed to assist the indigent aged be postponed for further study. As amended, the resolution also asked that the old-age provisions be postponed.

Opposition to the resolution was first expressed by Thomas Creigh, of the Chicago Association of Commerce. He asked that the vote be delayed. His motion was seconded by T. J. Mahoney, of the New York Association of Commerce. The resolution was temporarily laid aside. When it came up again for action, George Houston, president of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, presented the amendment, which was adopted.

Representative Harold Knutson (Republican), Minnesota, a delegate to the convention, moved to table the foreign trade resolution, but his motion was defeated. The resolution approved reciprocal trade agreements. He objected to "steamroller" tactics and insisted the resolutions should be in the hands of delegates at least 24 hours before they were voted on.

State's Rights Defended.

A substitution for the transportation resolution was offered by Fitzgerald Hall, Nashville, Tenn., railroad official. The committee had recommended studies toward a unification of bus and rail operations. The substitute read: "Determination of the standards of highway construction and the size and weight of motor vehicles operating over them should be left to the several States in accordance with their respective situations and problems."

On the resolution on social security legislation, the chamber stated: "... the provisions in the bill now pending should be adopted, the country should realize that within a decade there will be a tax burden amounting probably to as much as $1,000,000,000 a year, borne equally by the States and the Federal Government."

Pay Roll Tax Hit.

It declared the proposed pay roll tax would impose a heavy burden upon industry and should not be considered until recovery is assured.

"Finally," it said, "we question the propriety as well as the constitutionality of any effort by the Federal Government designed to take jurisdiction over the subject matter of this proposed legislation."

The NRA resolution asked that the present law be allowed to expire and that substitute legislation be enacted for a definitely limited time. The new legislation, it said, should provide for voluntary codes, with no provision for imposing or amending codes by executive action. It declared also that the new legislation should permit agreements between competitors, which upon receiving governmental approval, would be free from the penalties of the anti-trust laws.

Charges Investment Hindered.

"The collective bargaining provisions of the present law have definitely disproved their worth," the resolution said. "Further, we are of the opinion that efforts to enforce obedience to codes by extra-judicial methods, such as the Blue Eagle, withholding or withdrawal of Government contracts, and appeals to public prejudice, are contrary to our national traditions."

In the resolution on durable goods, the convention declared that existing laws prevent investment of large sums necessary to restore these industries.

"Securities legislation," the resolution said, "should be of such a character that sound finance may proceed confidently. The Government should retire from all activities that compete with private industry."

Opposing the banking amendments, the delegates adopted a resolution declaring:

"The measure provides for such concentration of power over reserve and commercial banking as would mean the establishment of a central bank mechanism that, under political control and influence, would necessarily destroy the present plan."

Oppose 30-Hour Week.

The resolution indorsed the Federal Reserve System as it now exists.

The chamber declared itself "definitely opposed" both to 30-hour week legislation and to the Wagner labor disputes bill.

In taking a stand on the holding company bill, the delegates opposed what they termed Federal regulation of operating companies and declared "holding companies have had a substantial part in the development of our electric and gas utilities and have undoubtedly conferred upon large areas benefits which they otherwise would have lacked."

In reference to the agricultural adjustment act the convention asked that Government aid given the producer be limited to the crop which is domestically consumed.

"We oppose," the resolution said, "any further governmental authority over the freedom of action of producers, processors, or distributors of basic agricultural products as provided in proposed amendments."

Protest More 'Agencies.'

On the subject of self-regulation of industry the convention opposed "establishment of agencies under governmental control to carry on activities recognized as proper functions of trade associations."

Other resolutions called for:

Subsidies for American-built merchant vessels.

Federal regulation of all forms on interstate transportation, and opposition to any form of Government ownership.

Removing unprofitable land from agriculture.

Supporting reciprocal trade agreements.

Reclamation of land by irrigation.

Laws making illegal advocacy of overthrow of the Government.

Modernization of national defense.

Fund Asked to Dredge James River Cut-Off

By the Associated Press.

A request for $705,000 to dig a cut-off through Jones Neck on James River, Virginia, was one of the first to be made by the board of engineers for rivers and harbors to Frank C. Walker, National Emergency Council director. This information was furnished yesterday to Representative Montague, of Richmond, by the office of the Chief of Army Engineers.

The sum asked will not complete the James River project, but the engineers said it was as much as could be used profitably on the work during the fiscal year beginning July 1.

Hull Warns Chamber on Economic Isolation

Harris & Ewing.

Voluntary Codes Asked, Utility Bill Hit By U. S. Chamber in 1935 Resolutions

Following are texts of resolutions adopted yesterday by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States on important New Deal measures and pending legislation:

Uncertainty surrounding the scope of legislation to supplant the present national industrial recovery act makes it appropriate that the United States Chamber of Commerce reaffirm and supplement the proposals adopted through referendum.

We believe that the present law should be allowed to expire in June of this year, but that prior to expiration substitute legislation should be enacted for a definitely limited time and voluntary basis.

Such new legislation should permit voluntary codes of fair competition by industries actually engaged in interstate commerce and should provide that industries which submit codes be required to agree to minimum wages, maximum hours of labor, and abolition of child labor; that code approval and administration be under the general jurisdiction of a quasi-judicial body, and that there be no provisions for imposing or amending codes by executive or administrative authority, although such authority should have the right to terminate approved codes. New legislation also should permit agreements between competitors which, upon receiving governmental approval, would be free from penalties of the antitrust laws.

The collective bargaining provisions of the present law have definitely disproved their worth. Further, we are of the opinion that efforts to enforce obedience to codes by extra-judicial methods, such as the Blue Eagle, withholding or withdrawal of Government contracts, and appeals to our national traditions.

Social Legislation.

Security against the hazards of unemployment and a dependent old age is a goal to be sought by all practicable means. In doing so, however, ample room should be left for individual thrift and initiative in making independent provision for security. The greatest care should also be taken to time the action so that recovery will not be hindered by the imposition of heavy taxes before the business of the country can stand it.

If the provisions in the bill now pending should be adopted, the country should realize that within a decade there will be a tax burden amounting probably to as much as $1,000,000,000 a year, borne equally by the States and the Federal Government.

The contributory old-age annuity provisions of the bill involve far-reaching social and economic effects upon the life of the country. We vigorously oppose any plan to build up reserves running into billions of dollars, the present bill contemplating an enormous sum of over $30,000,000,000. None of the countries which have developed social insurance plans have built reserves of any such relative magnitude. The attempt to do so in this country would, in our opinion, prove disastrous to our future economic structure and defeat the very security that is sought. The bill has also several technical provisions requiring close study, in order that they may not have unexpected and harmful results.

The employers' pay-roll tax in connection with the unemployment compensation provisions of the bill will impose a heavy burden upon industry and should not be considered until recovery is assured.

Finally we question the propriety as well as the constitutionality of any effort by the Federal Government designed to take jurisdiction over the subject matter of this proposed legislation.

Since the proposed legislation provides that pay-roll taxes will not in any event commence until 1937, we strongly recommend postponing further legislative action upon this plan until the next session of Congress. In the meantime, the whole subject should be fully explored by a congressional committee.

Postponement for thorough examination and complete public understanding can not operate to the disadvantage of anyone; for this legislation would confer no benefits in relief of unemployment which now exists.

Affiliate of Chamber Threatens to Withdraw

Threatening to withdraw his organization from membership in the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, Peter Van Horn, president of the National Federation of Textiles, Inc., protested to the chamber convention yesterday against its opposition to NRA.

Van Horn also odbjected to the proposal of the Senate Finance Committee for temporary extension of what he termed an "emasculated NRA."

Durable Goods.

A demand for durable goods estimated in the billions of dollars has accumulated during the years of depression. Depreciation and obsolescence of plant and equipment have occurred. Improvements and additions have been deferred. The filling of this demand and the correction of these conditions would go far to solve the problem of unemployment.

The resumption of activity in the durable goods field will depend upon the will of private capital to invest its savings in new plants and equipment. The result of this activity would be to diminish the burden of unemployment relief.

The investment of the huge sums necessary to restore these industries is being delayed because of existing laws and threatening legislation of a restrictive and destructive nature and fears of further intrusion of Government into the fields of private business.

Securities legislation should be of such character that sound finance may proceed confidently. The Government should retire from all activities that compete with private industry. The increasing tendency toward enactment of laws by which there is attempted the delegation of powers of Congress to bureaus and individuals should be stopped and laws of this character which have been enacted should not be extended and in due time should be repealed.

Federal Reserve System.

The Federal Reserve System from its inception has received the steadfast support of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. We reaffirm our confidence in its fundamental principles. We urge that no change be made in the Federal Reserve act except such as will supply further strength and usefulness to the present plan. It is vital that every necessary safeguard exist against partisanship in the control and operations of the system.

Proposals for substantial, even radical, changes in the Federal Reserve System are contained in Title II of the pending banking legislation. These proposals are not based upon the collective judgment of the officials of the system or supported by a body of authoritative banking and business opinion. In the aggregate the effects of their adoption in the form before the Senate or as reported to the House of Representatives would be to subject the operations of the system to a greatly increased danger of political domination. The measure provides for such concentration of power over reserve and commercial banking as would mean the establishment of a central bank mechanism that, under political control and influence, would necessarily destroy the present plan, which was approved by both political parties and the public and is based upon the maintenance of a system of regional Reserve banks possessing a high degree of autonomy. The centralized control of credit resulting from such a fundamental change would amount to little short of political dictatorship over the individual deposits and credit of our people. The bill as drawn does not so much affect bankers as the depositors in banks.

Quickly conceived and hurriedly enacted changes of important features of our Federal Reserve System are profoundly disturbing. It is, therefore, urged that Congress at this session provide for a thorough-going consideration of the Federal Reserve System and for ascertainment of any changes which should be made for its improvement

Other Banking Legislation.

With the elimination from the pending bill of the provisions of Title II, which we so earnestly believe should not be enacted, there would remain in the proposed banking act of 1935 the sections relating to insurance of bank deposits (contained in Title I) and the sections that relate to a number of technical changes of banking law (contained in Title III). The subject matter of the deposit insurance provisions and of the technical amendments, having been evolved by officials of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, in consultation with men of practical experience in banking and in business, are based upon demonstrated needs. The adoption of these provisions of the bill, with such minor modifications as congressional investigation may warrant, is recommended.

Labor Relations.

Prominently before Congress in the field of labor relations are two measures, the one designed to establish a uniform 30-hour work week throughout business and industry and the other undertaking to deal with labor relations in all industry and all fields of commerce and to create a permanent National Labor Relations Board.

To each of these proposals the Chamber is definitely opposed. Statutory regulation and reduction of hours of work not only would prevent that flexible adjustment of hours so essential to the proper conduct of business operations under constantly varying conditions, but it will inevitably result in marked increases in prices, in turn producing decreased consumption, decreased production and consequent unemployment. Economic recovery must come from an increased, not from a reduced, production.

Proposals such as those embodied in the labor relations bill would operate to disrupt rather than to

Trade Methods Control Peace, Hull Declares

Use of Arms Growing to an 'Alarming Extent,' Chamber Told.

Economic questions and conditions form the basis of international relations now more than at any other time in history, Secretary Hull told delegates to the convention of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States yesterday.

"If nations," he said, "are engaged in discrimination or retaliation, or in the practice of irritating trade methods toward one another, the preservation of friendly relations and of that understanding necessary for peace and mutual prosperity is rendered difficult and precarious

"Without friendly relations and understanding, nations are prone to settle questions or controversies by arbitration or other orderly and peaceful means. On the contrary, they are hasty to arm and to substitute force for justice in international affairs. We behold that tendency progressed to an alarming extent today."

Secretary Hull said the desire of the Government to combat this trend is the controlling reason for the efforts which it is now making to restore international trade on a basis of equality and friendship.

"This must continue to be the basis of world commercial relations," he said.

"We oppose exclusive or preferential arrangements the effect of which would be to impose discriminatory tariff rates against other countries," he continued. "On the other side, this country does not intend to accept discrimination against American commerce in foreign countries. It desires to extend equality of treatment to all nations and it seeks to obtain fair and equitable treatment from all nations."

Secretary Hull said that international trade has always been essentially of a complementary character, rather than sharply competitive, "and this will continue to be the case."

Chamber Flays Utilities Plan In Resolutions

promote proper relations between employer and employe and likewise retard the normal processes toward recovery. Any attempt to bar any form of honestly organized labor group from the provisions of collective bargaining, or to bar minorities from the privilege of conferring with their employers upon terms of work, is un-American, indefensible and unsupported by any considerations of the public interest. Employes, untrammeled or uncoerced by any person, should have the right to organize in such way as they desire for the purposes of collective bargaining, or, if they so prefer, they should have preserved to them the right to bargain individually.

Utility Bill of 1935.

To the regulation of public utilities the chamber has long been committed. It has advocated that State commissions should be given ample power, with necessary financial support and adequate personnel, to enable them to discharge their public duties efficiently with respect to electric and gas utilities. Where operating areas extend across State lines and involve interstate transmission, the chamber has urged that State agencies should take concurrent action with such participation by the Federal Power Commission as interstate problems require. The chamber has recognized the necessity for reasonable and adequate regulation for all aspects of utility enterprises that affect the public interest, both as regards consumers and investors.

The utility bill of 1935, as introduced in Congress, not only would seek to superimpose Federal regulation upon State regulation of operating utilities, but would undertake to destroy utility holding companies, which have had a substantial part in the development of our electric and gas utilities and which have undoubtedly conferred upon large areas benefits which they otherwise would have lacked. The growth of American utility enterprises has in some cases been accompanied by abuses. It is in the public interest that all such abuses should be prevented. As many abuses to which public attention has been called have related to securities, the Federal securities act would seem to afford assurance for the future.

Other abuses should be definitely identified in legislation and such provisions for regulation should be made as the public interest requires. The destruction of enterprises not only will mean violation of fundamental principles but inevitable losses to millions of innocent investors. Even threat of destruction brings disadvantage to many communities through postponement of services they need for their development and causes national loss through withholding from those industries most affected by unemployment orders for construction and equipment that would afford a large aggregate of work.

All attempt to superimpose Federal regulation of operating companies upon State regulation should be abandoned. The effects can only be detrimental to the interests of the communities which are served and to the exercise of State authority over utilities which in every true sense are essentially local.

Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Measures restricting the production of exportable farm products which can be grown in other sections of the world inevitably react to the disadvantage of the country imposing such restrictions, by encouraging their growth in other countries.

We recommend that any governmental financial aid given to the producer be limited to that portion of the crop which is domestically consumed. This policy would insure him a price that would compensate for his labor and preserve a parity with those things he has to buy. We believe exported agricultural products should be sold at world prices, to preserve our foreign markets and stimulate our general trade.

We oppose any further extension of governmental authority over the freedom of action of producers, processors or distributors of basic agricultural products, as provided in the proposed amendments to the agricultural adjustment act, H. R. 7713 and S. 1807, and in the commodity exchange bill, H. R. 6772 and S. 1334. We insist that in these bills the Government shall not, by law or by subsidy, control or attempt to increase the control over any producer, possessor or distributor by license, quota or otherwise, in the lawful and independent operation of his own enterprise; and we further insist that the Government shall not, by law, or otherwise, give preferential treatment to any group; nor shall the Government empower or sanction the imposition by one group of an industry of its will on another group in that industry, as contemplated in the bills referred to above.

Self-Regulation of Industry

Business has long maintained trade associations as a means of carrying on important functions in the interest of business and the public. The efficiency of management has been furthered, the extension of markets promoted, the stabilization of employment fostered, the establishment of fair competition advanced, and the rights of industry upheld through the proper operation of truly representative trade associations.

The benefits which have accrued from such cooperative work have been due, in part, to the flexibility, the voluntary character and the freedom from special forms of governmental control of trade associations. Such conditions should be continued.

The establishment of agencies under governmental control to carry on activities recognized as proper functions of trade associations, or the assumption of such activities by governmental agencies, will limit the field and functions of trade associations, retard the self-organization and self-government of industry and the furtherance of mutual cooperative action for the benefit of industry and the public.

NRA Defenders Before Supreme Court

Test Case Involving Wages Opened by Reed in Supreme Court.

Government's argument today after Reed concludes. Both doubtless will be armed with further, more explicit definitions of fair competition for today's court session.

While this prelude was enacted in the crowded court, in which press and public had difficulty hearing the unusually low-voiced questions from the bench, the NRA's new but short lease of life was at last out of committee and on the Senate schedule.

The Finance Committee's 13-to-14 vote on reporting out the compromise—the Administration had wanted a two-year extension—stood: For the resolution—Senators Harrison (chairman), George, Walsh, Bailey, Clark, Lonergan, Gerry, Guffey all Democrats; Couzens Keyes, Metcalf, Hastings, Capper, all Republicans. Against—Senators Barkley, Costigan, Clark, Democrats; La Follette, Progressive.

Walsh, Barkley and NRA leaders deplored the exemption of intrastate business as the death knell of NRA. "If this provision is retained," Walsh was quoted by the Associated Press, "it will break up the administration of the NRA more quickly and more completely than anything I can conceive of. It would be far better to repeal the whole law."

The Associated Press reported further that the committee had voted down these amendments: By Couzens, one to forbid production control, rejected without record vote; by Black, to forbid price-fixing even in mineral natural resources (which are exempted in the resolution as reported), rejected 13 to 4; by Black, to limit profits and salaries when price fixing is permitted, rejected 14 to 1; by Barkley, to permit codes for intrastate business which "materially and substantially" affect interstate commerce, rejected 14 to 7; by Costigan, to extend the act to April 1, 1937, rejected without vote.

Labor Report Filed.

At the same time the Senate Committee on Labor filed its favorable report on the much-contested Wagner labor disputes bill, which seeks to define the famous Section 7 (a) of the NIRA, over which labor and industry have battled continually.

As but four hours were set aside in the court for the NRA arguments, they will conclude today. Frederick H. Wood, of New York, who argued the gold cases for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and was then on the same side of the issue as the Government, is now arrayed on the opposite side in the pending NRA case. He will make the chief argument today for the defendants. They were convicted on 19 counts of violation of the live poultry code, but the Circuit Court of Appeals, while sustaining 17 counts, reserved two, relating to wages and hours.

Hence while the Schechters are battling to upset the whole NRA act, and thus to liberate themselves, the Government seeks to sustain the convictions and reverse the wages and hour counts as well.

Bloc Demands Nation Resume Silver Buying

Thomas Scores Further Delay in Bidding Up to $1.29 Price.

By the Associated Press.

An immediate resumption of governmental silver buying was demanded last night by Senators from silver mining States in the face of an abrupt break in world market quotations.

Expressing a belief that much good had been accomplished by "squeezing out speculators," they nevertheless thought the time had arrived for pushing the price of the metal upward again toward the Treasury's $1.29 goal.

Yesterday the London quotation tumbled to nearly 70.47, five cents less than when the markets closed last night and seven cents below the price which the Treasury is currently offering for the product of domestic mines.

Thomas Attacks Delay.

Most of the silverites also expressed confidence in the purposes and policies of the Administration where silver was concerned. A vigorous dissent, however, was rendered by Senator Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, whose interest is primarily in the inflationary implications of silver buying.

"A year ago Congress passed a silver enactment commanding the Treasury to do one of two things—purchase silver until it reached $1.29 cents, or until we had one-third as much silver as gold," he told the Senate.

"It has not done either. Some influence interrupted the rise in the price of silver. If silver was permitted to go to $1.29 one of the objectives of Congress would be fulfilled. Under the prseent arrangement neither objective is being carried out."

Senators Adams (Democrat), Colorado; McCarran (Democrat), Neveda; Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, and others from silver States, in statements off the floor, called for renewed buying.

Speculators' Losses Seen.

With bullish speculators apparently suffering extensive losses, McCarran said the answer to the drop in price was "for the Treasury to go in and bid the price of silver right up to $1.29 and shake loose these bears that have been depressing the price."

"The Government is not only justified but obligated to resume its purchases now," Adams said. "For a period, due to unsettlement of the market, it had to discontinue for fear that speculative influences would create fictitious values.

"That situation seems to have been clarified. The break in the price is not disturbing; you have to expect fluctuations." Wheeler expressed the opinion that the Treasury "should go right ahead now, and keep the price moving up."

County Begins Accident Drive

Let the Reckless Drivers Beware, Coughlan Warns.

An intensive drive against speeding and reckless driving will be inaugurated today by Montgomery County police in the Silver Spring, Md., substation area. A special detail will be assigned to Georgia and Sligo avenues and to the Colesville pike with orders to strictly enforce the traffic laws.

Several fatal accidents in the Silver Spring area, particularly the death of a small child at Sligo Park Hills, has prompted the drive.

Bean Will Quit As First Result Of Crime Study

Moves to Defeat Purpose Grow; Garnett Reply Due Today.

Speculation regarding effects of the report of the House sub-committee on crime was rife yesterday in downtown Washington as interested members of Congress continued to pull political strings to have the report rejected or at least modified.

Only definite development, however, was an announcement by Inspector Thaddeus Bean, assistant superintendent of police, that he would file an application for retirement, effective June 1. He declined to amplify the statement.

The sub-committee indirectly recommended his retirement, as one of the officers above the rank of captain and the age of 60, and recommended that the position as assistant superintendent he holds and to which Inspector Albert J. Headley aspires should be abolished. It carries an extra $500 in salary above the pay of an inspector.

Inspector Headley, who conferred late Wednesday with Representative Thomas L. Blanton (Democrat), of Texas, with whom he had a "gentlemen's agreement," was absent from his office all yesterday.

United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett was reported to be working on draft of an answer to the sub-committee's report, which suggested he be removed as incompetent. He is expected to make the answer public today.

Although officially silent when the report was made public, members of the Virginia delegation yesterday admitted they had been active in Garnett's behalf on Capitol Hill.

Representative Schuyler Otis Bland (Democrat), leader of the movement, admitted a protest had been filed with Chairman Mary T. Norton, of the House District Committee.

Blanton to Denounce Study.

Coming to Garnett's defense, he said it is difficult to understand how the present United States attorney could have served the Department of Justice so efficiently in the Palmer and Davis administrations and then suddenly have been declared incompetent by the House sub-committee on crime.

Assisting Bland is Representative Howard W. Smith (Democrat), of Alexandria, influential member of the House Rules Committee.

Blanton's tactics in behalf of Headley have not been revealed but it is expected that the fiery Texan will take the floor to denounce the sub-committee report some time before it is acted upon by the House District Committee. He is known to have written letters to members of the sub-committee.

Rumor Names Edwards.

Among rumors regarding a possible successor to Maj. Ernest W. Brown as superintendent of police was one that Inspector Lewis I. H. Edwards is the logical choice should a man be taken from the department. Observers recalled, however, that Edwards is in poor health, only recently having been ordered on vacation by the board of police surgeons.

Should the District Commissioners follow advice of the sub-committee in its entirety, moreover, a man from outside the department would be selected. This recommendation naturally has stirred rumors that Brig. Gen. Pelham Glassford, stormy former short-term police superintendent, might be recalled because of his friendly relations with the present national Administration. However, there is no concrete basis for the speculation, so far as could be learned.

The Merchants and Manufacturers Association yesterday went to defense of Maj. Brown in a resolution adopted by the board of governors as the Barristers Club called a meeting for 8 o'clock tonight at the Cosmos Club to decide what stand that organization should take on the recommendation that Garnett be replaced.

Petition Favors Brown.

A statement by the Merchants and Manufacturers Association explained that the resolution "expressed confidence" in Maj. Brown's "integrity and ability" and petitioned the Commissioners to retain him as chief of police.

The resolution pointed out that the greatest need is a more adequate police force and expressed the belief that "if Washington was given an adequate increase in police force the police department could and would be able to cope with any conditions arising."

Chairman Jennings Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, chairman of the crime sub-committee, was due back in Washington last night after a trip to New Jersey, but it is unlikely that the sub-committee will take any official action until the transcript of the hearing is printed and the full House District Committee meets again to consider the report. This will be at least ten days or two weeks.

Commission Awaits Report.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen said administrative recommendations of the sub-committee will be referred to a special group of District officials named recently to handle minor police matters. This group includes Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman, Assistant Engineer Commissioner Howard F. Clark and George W. Offutt, chairman of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board.

However, the major question of policy on whether the high command of the Police Department should be retired will be decided by the Commissioners themselves, Hazen said, after they have received copies of the report.

Hazen emphatically denied rumors that the board has even tentatively selected a successor to Maj. Brown.

"Were you ever in the establishment in the Mather Building?" Mr. Sirica asked.

"Not until the actual raid," replied Lieut. Little. "But I listened in on the tapped wires, and I knew bets were being taken there."

Shortly afterward Mr. Sirica produced several "surprise witnessses" in an effort to show Lieut. Little, who had obtained warrants for them, did not know who they were.

Two of the witnesses, Jesse L. Leslie and James Mulroe, appeared briefly at the rear of the court in a sort of peek-a-boo performance. Later the District announced that the men were both sought on warrants charging gaming, and that they had operated places on North Capitol street and Ninth street northwest. In the secret telephonic code system, Leslie's number was 75, and Mulroe's 27. Police sought them last night.

Identifies Defendants.

P. B. Owen, elevator operator in the Mather Building, was brought to the stand yesterday afternoon and asked if he could identify any of the defendants as having been passengers in his elevator.

"Oh, yes, I can, indeed I can," replied Owen, who is about 20 years old.

"Come, point them out then," ordered Assistant District Attorney Fihelly.

Owen identified seven of the defendants as passengers at various times. He particularly remembered Sam Beard, before whose chair he halted for several moments.

Still another witness who identified numerous of the defendants was Thaddeus Jones, superintendent of the Mather Building.

"I was paid $100 a month rent for the fifth floor suite," testified Mr. Jones.

"I never saw or heard of any gambling going on, and never heard any complaints about the place. They were good tenants—and I can't say there was anything out of the way about them."

Famed Explorer Seeks World Peace by Unity

Royal Geographic Head Says All Faiths Have Same Basis.

Sir Francis Younghusband, whose travels have sliced the world into more pieces than are in a jigsaw puzzle, came to Washington yesterday pleading for world unity.

Too advanced in years to carry on conquests that led him to mountain summits and fame half a century ago, the white-haired British explorer declared his most important work is yet to be done. He is campaigning for a vast union of faiths—a union that will bring peace to the world through good will among men.

In his suite at a Capital hotel Sir Francis mapped out this campaign with precision expected of a veteran of the military field. In July, 1936, in St. Paul's Cathedral, Sir Francis hopes to meet leaders of every spiritual belief in the world. After three weeks of conferences, he wants that which these faiths hold in common to express itself for international understanding and good will.

Backs Everest Climbers.

"I guess every one wants peace," Sir Francis explained. "Even Hitler says he wants peace. But you can't have it except through good will. That is what I want to exist throughout the world."

In 1886 Sir Francis led an expedition that opened a new route through India to Mongolia. In 1903 he led a mission to Lhasa, the capital of Tibet, opening that country to Western trade and civilization. Since then, as president of the Royal Geographic Society, he has organized four expeditions to climb 29,000-foot Mount Everest and has planned another for next year.

Sir Francis hopes the fifth attempt will reach the summit. The nearest his men have been to the top is 1,000 feet.

"Lots of people wonder why a man who has been so interested in reaching physical peaks is so interested now in spiritual peaks," commented the explorer.

Speaks Here Tomorrow.

"But the two are not unrelated. The fact is I became interested in world fellowship years ago while I was opening the way through the Himalayas to Tibet. I met Mohammedans, Hindus, Buddhists and men of many more religions and faiths. I knew them all and learned about their conceptions of the spiritual.

"I became convinced there is something common in all and it is only through that something that the world can have harmony."

Tomorrow afternoon he will address a meeting sponsored by the Washington Council of the World Fellowship of Faiths. It will be held in the parish hall of the Church of the Epiphany.

Witnesses Tell Of Phone Bets In Beard Trial

Gambling Equipment and Steel Door Brought Into Court.

By Frederic B. Tuttle.

Striking swiftly in its effort to convict Sam Beard, reported prince of Washington's intricate undercover gambling empire, the District late yesterday introduced evidence to show that certain telephone numbers, found in the big safe on the fifth floor of the Mather Building in the raid of October 5, were those of a gaming establishment, which reported to the G street offices and received information from them.

Josephus Sands, commercial superintendent of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., was recalled to the stand late in the afternoon. He produced a list of 17 telephones which were alleged to run into the Beard suite, together with the addresses of the places to which they were hooked.

When the long list had been compiled and verified, Detective Sergt. George Deyoe, of the Metropolitan Police Vice Squad, appeared on the stand and told of raids conducted on two of the phone addresses long before the law broke into the Mather Building and snared Sam Beard.

One of these places, Sergt. Deyoe testified, was in the 500 block of Tenth street northwest. He and his men raided the establishment on May 18, 1934.

The other was in the 1400 block of L street. In substantiating their claim that both addresses were places where bets were taken, and not simply where gaming information, as the defense contends, was given out, Assistant District Attorneys Roger Robb and John Fihelly, in charge of the prosecution, had a heavy steel door, parts of gambling equipment and other evidence brought into court.

Both the raided places, the District contended, were gambling establishments. Besides the legitimate telephone numbers by which the wires were listed, there were code numbers, too. These were found on the list of 17 phones taken from the safe—each number coded simply.

Conversation With Beard.

As a prelude for the Government's trump card in its case against Beard, who is charged with conspiracy to violate the District's gambling laws, Leut. George Little, head of the vice squad, took the stand. His appearance came shortly after the court had begun its afternoon session.

"When we raided the spot in the Mather Building," said Lieut. Little, "I went up to Sam Beard and asked him if he was in charge.

"Beard said: 'I'd rather not answer at this time.'

"I then ordered him to put on his coat. He said he had valuable property there, and wanted to protect it.

"He said: 'Lieutenant, you have a reputation for being a good fellow. Why not let me out of here?'"

Lieut. Little testified he said "nothing doing," and went ahead with his duties.

Defense Attorney John Sirica loosed a withering cross-examination at Lieut. Little. The officer examined bits of evidence calmly and answered Mr. Sirica's questions deliberately.

Mr. Sirica strove to show that Lieut. Little had obtained warrants for the arrest of Beard and his 12 co-defendants without actually being able to identify them—"hearsay warrants."

County Board Backs Addition Of Call Boxes

New System Will Speed Police Work in Three Towns.

Installation of police call boxes and signal lights in the rural section of Montgomery County, Md., was approved yesterday by the Montgomery County Commissioners meeting at Rockville, Md.

Telephone boxes with signal lights will be installed at Gaithersburg, Damascus and Poolesville. Three other boxes without lights will be installed at Norbeck, Darnestown and Laytonville. Mileage charges for the latter three boxes would make it too expensive to place lights on them.

Telephone operators at the various exchanges will relay emergency calls to the policemen when they telephone from the boxes. Installation of the system is modeled somewhat after the system which has been in use for several years at Bethesda substation, although not as elaborate.

Other Business.

The commissioners will visit all EWA projects in the county Monday to determine the progress and to familiarize themselves with the work being carried on.

Surety bonds for 35 clerks in the county commissioners' and county treasurer's office were approved by the board. They were written by a Baltimore concern. Each person is insured for amounts from $1,000 to $2,000 and the total policy amounts to $45,000.

Hopkins' List For May Relief Omits Illinois

Threat Is Carried Out in 90 Million Grant to 41 States.

Couzens resolution, which is aimed specifically at getting the requirements imposed on States, may be only the entering wedge to a full investigation of the allocation of more than $2,000,000,000 by the FERA.

Other developments as President Roosevelt prepared to set up his works organization included:

The arrival of hordes of visiting mayors, county commissioners, Governors and others—all seeking a slice of the $4,000,000,000 works fund.

Job Seekers Swarm.

The arrival in even larger numbers of job seekers. With 100,000 applications for jobs on file, PWA Administrator Harold L. Ickes ordered assistants to stop taking them.

A conference between Senators Henrik Shipstead (Farmer-Labor), Minnesota, and Louis Murphy (Democrat), Iowa, on the one hand, and President Roosevelt, on the other, in which plans for spending $89,200,000 on the upper Mississippi canal were discussed.

Another White House conference on Wisconsin work-relief, attended by Hopkins, Ickes, Frank C. Walker, who is to head the new works division on applications, and both the Wisconsin La Follettes—Robert, Senator, and Phil, Governor.

The relief allotments to States for May were made from an additional $140,000,000 furnished the FERA out of the works relief fund, Hopkins said. When completed, the total is expected to be somewhat smaller than the $113,661,384 allocated in April.

$6,000,000 for Bay State.

States for which the allotments have not been figured are California, Delaware, Iowa, New Jersey, New York and Vermont. The figures given include all grants for this month, it was explained, with the exception of rural rehabilitation programs.

Pennsylvania Also Warned.

Questioned about Illinois relief, Hopkins declared that until the State Legislature complies with his demands "I am not going to give them any more money." The same applies to Pennsylvania after the fifteenth of this month, unless that State finds $5,000,000 each month to contribute to expenditures.

The FERA is now administering relief directly in four States—Louisiana, Georgia, Ohio and North Dakota. The change was made in each case after heated controversies with the four Governors. Federal funds are still being spent in those States, but in the case of Georgia the payment of rural teachers—a special project—has been discontinued.

"The Georgia delegation was up here today about that," Hopkins told a roomful of newspapermen. "The responsibility rests on Gov. Talmadge and nobody else. He blocked the legislation; if Talmadge doesn't want to do anything for schools, I don't see why FERA should have to put up the money."

Hopkins said that applications for relief "have been dropping all over the country," but that six weeks will be required to complete his check-up on relief rolls. The works program will not be held up on that account, he added, indicating that new executive orders are expected momentarily to get it started.

Senator Glass said that the Appropriations Committee is expecting a memorandum from Hopkins, giving the information sought in the Couzens resolution. After that it will be "up to the committee" to decide whether to ask for additional information or to summon Hopkins and other witnesses.

Business Seen Roosevelt Foe In '36 Elections

But High Democrat States President Will Win Over Any Rival.

Atlantic City, Chicago and St. Louis nevertheless are expected to bid.

During the day more political talk rang in the Senate with Neely (Democrat), of West Virginia, defending Father Charles E. Coughlin, of eDtroit, from the attacks leveled at him earlier by Senator Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina. Neely was joined by Huey Long, who has talked "third party" and approved some of the Coughlin program.

Explaining he had been barred from defending Father Coughlin by the recent anti-lynching bill filibuster, Neely said "if you do not believe more pepple are interested in him than in the men who were conducting the anti-lynching filibuster here, just go through a hotel corridor and you will see there are none but are listening to him broadcast."

Developments Mapped By Upper Monongahela

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Clarksburg, W. Va., May 2.—With five delegates from each of ten counties in the Upper Monongahela Valley appointed at county meetings, the stage is set for a general meeting here todmorrow afternoon to organize the Upper Monongahela Valley development association.

The association will adopt a program of activities in cooperation with plans of the Federal Government to encourage the rehabilitation and development of the valley, and take such preliminary steps as may be necessary to immediate functioning of the movement. Representative Jennings Randolph, of Elkins, plans to attend the meeting.

Senators Split As Bonus Fight Goes on Floor

Patman Backers Launch Attack on Both Vinson, Harrison Measures.

Harrison bill, rang through the Senate.

While debate raged, John Thomas Taylor, head of the legion's legislative committee, conferred with Senators in a room off the floor reserved for press interviews. Passing through the room, Senator James Couzens (Republican), of Michigan, heatedly challenged the doorkeeper.

Taylor made a quick exit as Couzens announced he might take the matter up in the Senate.

Taylor later returned to the room in search of a Senator, noticed Couzens sitting there, and abruptly left again. Afterward, the Senator indicated he would do nothing further about the matter.

Harrison Leads Debate.

Chairman Pat Harrison of the Finance Committee led off the floor debate with an argument for his compromise, which he said would cost at least $1,000,000,000 less than the rival plans and would be signed by the President, while the others would not. At his side sat Harold W. Breining, Veterans' Administration expert, who helped draft it.

Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Democrat), Missouri, former national commander of the American Legion, obtained the floor long enough to offer the legion-sponsored Vinson bill as a substitute.

Then the fight started. Senator Elmer Thomas, of Oklahoma, white-haired inflationist leader, insisted the Vinson bill was a mere "authorization" and "would be of no more importance than a resolution enacted by the United States Chamber of Commerce * * * or anybody, anywhere at this time."

Long Backs Patman Bill.

In and out of the debate a dozen times, Huey Long, of Louisiana, joined Thomas in the fight for the Patman bill.

"The President ain't gonna veto the Patman bill," Huey shouted. "How do I know that? Not from any word from the President. He seldom sends me any word. I know it because the President is a good politician. I am a politician and a candidate for re-election. He's a politician and a candidate for re-election. There ain't a chance on earth he'll veto it."

How the Senate would vote remained a toss-up, as Senators wavered between the Vinson plan, leaving bonus financing up to the Treasury, but paying veterans in full in cash; the Harrison bill, paying veterans in cash or bonds under a plan that would not bring full maturities until about 1942, and the Patman measure, passed by the House, providing payment through an inflationary note issue.

While legion lobbies were active in behalf of the Vinson bill, Veterans of Foreign Wars legislative representatives were drumming up support for the Patman bill. The Harrison compromise, although never formally espoused by the Administration, will draw the bulk of its support from Administration Senators.

Named on Auto Board.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., May 2.—George A. Kershner has received his appointment as a member of the temporary State Commission of the Motor Vehicle Maintenance Trade. He will go to Charleston this week to plan for the organization of the group which will supervise labor and wages in the automobile maintenance industry.

Price Fixing at the Source

No corporate milkman can fix the price which the consumer must pay.

In Washington this company every day faces active and resourceful competition. It commands no favorable price differential from the dairy farmers.

If it tried to boost the going doorstep figure, its competitors would at once use the fact to take away its customers.

No one company can rule the milk routes, for no one company can control the price paid to milk producers.

The dairy farmers in Maryland and Virginia have a strong, well managed organization. It controls approximately 93 per cent of the milk sold in Washington and vicinity.

Because of strict health regulations milk from other nearby sections cannot be sold in Washington. The corporate milkman has no other choice than to buy his milk from the dairy farmers' association.

The plain and realistic fact is that the dairy farmers name the figure which the milkman must pay.

True, he could assert his independence and refuse to pay their price.

If he did, he would find that he could not bring in milk from other producing areas—and meanwhile, competition would be picking the bones of his business.

GOVERNMENT RELIEF TO PUZZLED MOTORISTS

It's In Federal Specification VV-M-571 for motor fuel

U. S. experts could tell you plenty about buying gasoline shrewdly

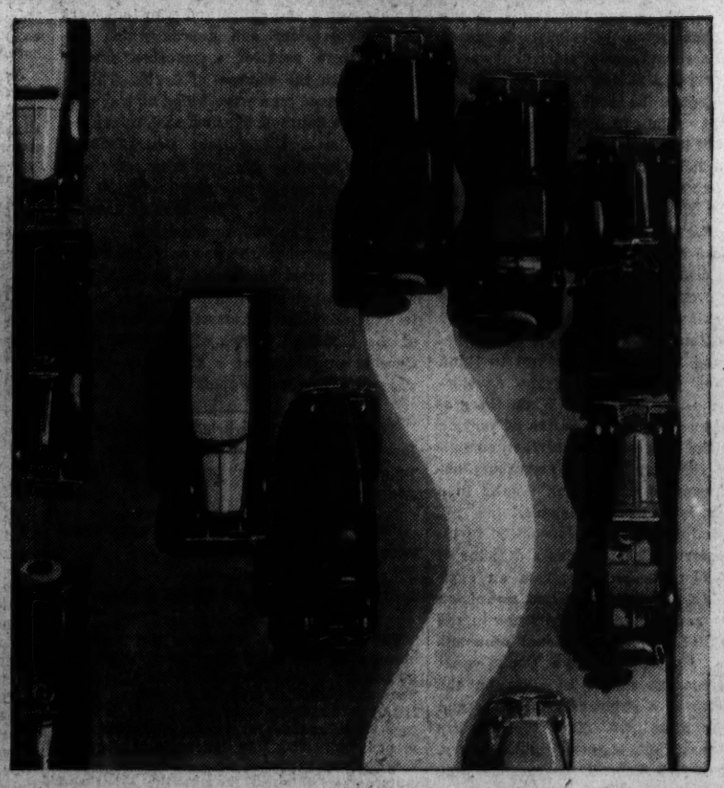
You don't have to ask them, however, because their specifications are open and available to all.

The Government has set up two sets of motor fuel specifications. One is for ordinary use. The other is higher and more rigid. It specifies requirements for emergency gasoline in ambulances, fire-engines, etc.

This gives you a sound method for judging various gasolines

Let the U. S. Government specifications be your own official guide.

Texaco Fire-Chief gasoline more than meets their higher emergency requirements. When you stop at the Texaco pump you are buying your gasoline just as scientifically as buyers of Government gasoline do.



Texaco Fire-Chief makes motorists more alert in traffic

TEXACO FIRE-CHIEF

When you buy at this pump you will be getting, at no extra cost, a gasoline that more than meets the Government's requirements* for fire-engines and ambulances

Hull House And Peace.

Last night the twentieth anniversary of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom was held here, commemorated in a dinner for one of its founders, Jane Addams. This also marked the first reunion of the American women who sailed with her to the Hague in 1915 to meet with women from other lands in the vain hope of planning a reasonable peace. Eventually, of course, the other sex wrote the treaty. It has small reason to be proud of its handiwork.

Miss Addams, in spite of her 75 years, is today the same indefatigable and inspiring leader as in 1889, when she established the now famous Hull House in Chicago. At that time little was known or had been accomplished in the field of organized social work. Not content with having been one of the first to arouse public conscience in what she termed "the stupid atrocities of contemporary life" and "its needless suffering," Miss Addams turned her keen foresightedness to "the arid waste" of wars. In recognition of her constructive efforts in that connection, she was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for 1931.

Jane Addams has lived to see the Women's International League grow so powerful that its branches in Germany and Italy have been suppressed. Today the League is seeking to make peace a "political issue" in the United States. Of course that procedure, as Mussolini and Hitler have demonstrated, is cracking down on the organization, is not enough. Peace, as Miss Addams must long ago have found out about charity, is much more than a matter of public sentiment. It can no more be secured by merely winning votes than poverty could be eliminated by adoption of the Townsend plan. After Hull House was established, it was exceedingly difficult to induce the immigrants living near it, speaking different languages, to partake of its benefits. The practical nature of the program had to be demonstrated in order to win them over. The parable, in relation to the achievement of world peace, seems clear enough.

One More Victim.

Every fatal motor accident is a tragedy. When a cautious pedestrian is struck down on a sidewalk by a machine beyond the control of the driver the consequences are especially pathetic. And when that victim happens to be the wife of a widely beloved and respected community leader the ghastly effects of careless driving are brought home with unusual poignancy.

The death of Mrs. Sarah Bowerman ought to shock Washington into an increasingly active campaign against the automobile menace. Needless tragedy has been carried to extremes where it can no longer be pathetically regarded by either officials or the public. No doubt the committee to which the District Commissioners recently assigned the task of working out a remedy for this dreadful sacrifice of life will be aroused, as all of Washington is aroused, by this latest illustration of the menace of the automobile.

If it fails to bring forth constructive suggestions, the Commissioners will be forced by circumstance to devise more and more drastic restrictions upon the privilege of operating machines that may so easily become instruments of death.

Invitation To Lawbreaking.

Senator Borah has advised an Idaho resident engaged in a local, intrastate business, to disregard any code restrictions and "go his own way." He states without qualification that the Federal Government has no power to interfere with the conduct of these local businesses. "I do not assume," he concludes, "the Government will interfere; but if it does please advise me."

A good many lawyers held that abrogation of the gold clause in contracts was an unconstitutional exercise of power until the Supreme Court decided otherwise. Innumerable other laws raising questions of constitutional invasion of private rights have been passed by Congress. It seems most unprecedented, however, for a member of the Senate to urge an individual to defy the law until there has been a judicial test of its validity.

Individual violations of laws of questionable constitutionality serve the useful purpose of hastening a decision of moot questions. But such tests are often long delayed and sometimes never satisfactorily determined. If our legislators begin to counsel virtual rebellion against laws whose constitutionality they themselves challenge, they will appear to be usurping the functions of the courts.

Senator Borah is among those legislators who profess to be jealous of the rights of the judiciary to render uncoerced opinions. How can he reconcile this attitude with his present advice to anticipate the judgment of the court of highest appeal in a question concerning the extent of the power of the Federal Government to regulate private industry?

Unsystematic Relief.

The Couzens resolution, calling for an investigation of the methods employed in the distribution of Federal relief funds, is long overdue. If there are any rules, regulations or formal system of any kind governing the allotment of this money, the general public as well as Congress is ignorant of their existence.

FERA contributions amount to varying percentages of all relief outlays in the States, ranging from approximately 50 per cent to virtually 100 per cent of the total. There is no way of knowing whether the States that cover one-half of their local relief expenditures are more cooperative, or merely in a better position to pay, than those which fail to make any provision for care of the destitute.

Since Federal relief funds are allocated on the basis of need, instead of being apportioned among the States with reference to population or some other definite index, it is obviously difficult to establish hard and fast rules governing the proportions of Federal, State and local contributions. The numbers on relief rolls and the taxable resources of the communities in which they reside are variable factors which have to be taken into account in calling upon local governments to shoulder part of the relief burden.

As the FERA becomes increasingly awake to the necessity of transferring a greater share of relief costs to the local governmental units, some States that have relied heavily upon Federal funds are placed in an embarrassing position. They must either obey a command from Dictator Hopkins to levy additional taxes, or face the prospect of losing Federal support. The serious nature of the dilemma that confronts them was explained by the former Governor of Maryland in a recent address. Mr. Ritchie pointed out that in granting aid, the Federal Government "imposes upon the States conditions which may require the acceptance of laws that possibly are entirely contrary to their conceptions of self-government."

Although Mr. Ritchie admits that he has no easy remedy to suggest for this unfortunate situation, it should be possible to introduce some order into the growing chaos. Congress is primarily responsible for the present situation because it left such large discretionary powers in the hands of the Federal agency administering relief. But even so, the FERA should have proceeded without delay to establish some comprehensible tests or standards by which to judge the capacity of the several States to supplement Federal relief outlays.

If the FERA has any well-defined system, and is not relying upon arbitrary decrees and haphazard intervention to force contributions from the States, the Couzens resolution will bring its procedure to light. On the other hand, if the relief program is really as uncoordinated and erratic as it appears to be, reforms in methods of administration should be insisted upon, and that before the Federal relief administrator extends his activities into new fields of work relief.

A Promising Appointment.

The phrase "rural electrification" conveys a somewhat vague impression to the average urban mind. Obviously it means carrying the advantages of electric power to isolated farms. But how shall this praiseworthy objective be achieved? Will the Government need to build new power plants? Will it sell electricity directly to impoverished farmers at less than production costs? What arrangements will be made to finance the purchase of electric equipment which the farmer can put to work?

Still more intangible are the underlying social and economic implications of such an enormous program. What effect will it have on the aggregate output of American farms? To what extent will this electric power displace human labor? Any attempt to think through the implications of the development reveals its magnitude. When the program is extended over 48 States of varying character the task becomes further complicated. To visualize it as an emergency undertaking capable of showing results in a single year, is still more difficult.

The Administration is especially fortunate, therefore, in securing as a director of the rural electrification program an engineer who is not only a competent technician but also a man of broad experience in the application of power to national economic problems. Morris Llewellyn Cooke went from engineering school to start on the bottom rung as a shipyard apprentice and journeyman machinist. Since then he has served as assistant engineer in the Navy, as a successful consulting engineer, as director of public works in Philadelphia, as chairman of the storage section of the War Industries Board. He was director of the Giant Power Survey for Pennsylvania in 1923, and chairman of the Mississippi Valley Commission of the PWA. More recently the Government has made use of his broad experience through the National Resources Board and the National Power Survey.

The appointment of Dr. Cooke—Lehigh made him an Sc. D. in 1922—to plan the rural electrification program imposes upon him even greater responsibilities than any he has heretofore exercised. But his record for public service insures that he will bring to the task insight, devotion, experience and well-balanced judgment. If this appointment may be regarded as a standard in the establishment of executives for the work-relief program, confidence in its constructive value will be substantially strengthened.

The Parker Dam Case.

To the casual observer in Washington the decision of the Supreme Court in the Parker Dam case was just another instance of the results of careless legislation and unconstitutional administration. But to the people of Arizona it is a victory of great importance. For the present, at least, construction of the unauthorized dam is halted, and Arizona will have another opportunity to present her case before Congress.

In passing the recovery act Congress did not specifically authorize construction of the Parker Dam across the Colorado River. It merely placed vast sums in the hands of the PWA to spend at its own discretion, observance of the law being assumed. But the PWA set aside $2,000,000 to begin construction of a $13,000,000 reclamation, power and flood-control project without any apparent consideration of the Federal statute forbidding the obstruction of navigable streams without specific Congressional authority. Now, after a good deal of money has been spent and elaborate plans for construction of the dam have been completed, the PWA learns that the whole project is without legal warrant.

This lesson for the PWA is especially timely and significant because of pending initiation of the $4,000,000,000 work-relief program. But the moral of this case runs even deeper than the desirability of respect for law in distributing public works funds. Arizona insists that her water rights in the Colorado River are being impaired by the Parker Dam project, as well as by development of Boulder Dam. Water is the essence of virtually all enterprise in the plateau regions between the Rockies and the Sierra Nevada Mountains. The people of Arizona fear that the great resources of the Colorado will be appropriated by Southern California if these two reservoirs are brought into immediate use for irrigation and generation of power.

Whether or not this complaint is justified, it long ago raised a highly controversial issue, the decision of which may have a profound effect upon the future development of several States. In fact, it is probably the most important question confronting the section of the country through which the Colorado cuts its unique channel. Yet, so far as the Parker Dam is concerned, the power to make this decision was quietly assumed by a bureau in Washington. If our form of government means anything, the future of sovereign States can not be decided in any such cavalier manner. Arizona is to be complimented for having fought the case through to the discomfiture of our arrogant Federal bureaucracy.

Blood And Apple Blossoms.

Washingtonians had the choice yesterday of attending one of two nearby celebrations. In Winchester the queen of the Shenandoah Apple Blossom Festival was feted as she arrived to preside over the annual springtide pageant. In Fredericksburg cavalry troops, Marines and cadets turned out to reenact the Battle of Chancellorsville, which took place just 72 years ago.

Undoubtedly the Chancellorsville program was interesting. To watch reenactment of the maneuvers which enabled Lee's army to escape from between the closing jaws of the divided Federal forces was stimulating to every student of Civil War history. But the fact remains that those who attended the spectacle, who thrilled to the air stunts and drills, and who took part in the receptions and dances which followed, were part of a macabre jubilee draped with the shadow of death. Thirty-three thousand men were killed or wounded in the nine hours of fighting, and, to cap the tragic climax, the gallant Gen. Jackson was shot down by his own men after successfully crumpling the right wing of his encircling opponents. There was no dancing the night of Chancellorsville itself.

At a time when the entire world recognizes the precariousness of peace, there were thousands who had no interest in the festival of Nature, preferring to recall one of the bloodiest battles of our Civil War. Here is an interesting commentary on the ways of a peaceful people.

Don't blame the world if it places too low an estimate on what you know. Its judgment necessarily is based on what you do.

There are always a certain number of nuts who will bolt the party.

Progress Against Child Labor.

From The Kansas City Star.

The obligation to complete the work of eliminating real child labor in America can be fulfilled, regardless of the fate of the long-pending child-labor amendment or even of the NRA in anything approaching its present form. Seeing that ratification of the amendment is impossible this year and perhaps next, the Children's Bureau notes the effective results so far obtained through the codes and emphasizes the necessity of a continuance of such an achievement.

While the number of children thus kept from unsuitable occupations is uncertain, figures are cited to show a wholesome decrease in such employment, particularly as it affects those 14 to 15 years of age. This is one benefit of the NRA about which there can be no legitimate debate. This work, along with the activity against sweatshop hours and wages, can go on, whatever becomes of the rest of the NRA.

Extremes can be avoided. Young people of 16 to 18, who are not children and who may need employment to support themselves and to aid their families, can be allowed to work where opportunity offers, and the impressive gains in the banning of genuinely detrimental child labor can be further advanced.

What About A Combined Attack?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The attitude taken by your paper under the recent editorial sarcastically entitled "Our Inadequate Navy" is most regrettable. Although you noted the fact that the appropriation for the coming year is double that of the fiscal year, you failed to call attention to the fact that such is occasioned by the reason that naval appropriations in the past few years were just half what they should have been, particularly under our Quaker President, Mr. Hoover. Must you be reminded that the building program is for replacements rather than for expansion?

You account for this "huge" appropriation by saying, "the Administration has no policy to offer which affords a better assurance of lasting peace than is furnished by a huge Navy." Sir, if you would leave the appealing realm of make-believe and idealism and face facts you would know that the only policy of lasting peace for the United States today is a Navy second to none. No nation will attack another when it knows it can't win.

Should war occur, would it not be murder to send our men out against a modern fleet, in over age ships such as we now have operating with the fleet? In spite of their ability and courage their chances would be very poor. Disarmament will come some day, no doubt. We have been practically disarmed and exposed for some years without apparent influence in that direction upon other nations. I would not care to see our United States sacrificed in an attempt to save a situation now hopeless. Yours for a large protective Navy. R. D.

The Mexican Controversy Continues

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have seen the answers given by Mr. Lagarde to Mr. Hickey's questions that appeared in your paper. I do not see how anybody can say that no government employe has been put to choose between religion and starvation, when I can present to you the seven inclosed questions. (Space limitations prevent the reproduction of these questions. They cite specific instances of discharges from Mexican government service allegedly due to refusal to cooperate in that government's religious policy—Ed.) These questions were sent by me to Mr. Quintanilla, of the Mexican Embassy, and they have never been answered. They are facts very well known all over Mexico, and to many who are interested in the Mexican situation here in the United States.

As to the antireligious oath put up to the teachers in the public schools of Mexico, Congressman Higgins defied the Mexican Ambassador to deny that there was such an oath, imposed upon the teachers in Mexico, and the embassy has only replied with a very weak answer, not directed to him, but as a general statement which does not prove that the antireligious oath has not beeen imposed at least on some of the teachers.

Mexican officials wish to influence American opinion by giving out statements in which the truth is not entirely stated. They do not answer questions like those put before the embassy by his excellency, Archbishop Curley of Baltimore, or by myself, because by doing so they will have to admit that there is a persecution of all religions in Mexico.

EDWARD LODGE CURRAN.
President, International Catholic Truth Society.
Brooklyn, N. Y., April 27.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Denials on the part of the Mexican government and their sympathizers are to be expected. When a challenge is accepted and "answers" given to "clean-cut, straightforward questions," these "answers" should contain something more factual than the mere negations themselves.

Does Mr. Lagarde deny that the New York Times, the Associated Press and other news services last fall carried extensive accounts relating the fact that medical internes and nurses in Mexico City, Juarez and other cities of Mexico were discharged and were rendered utterly unable to practice their professions because of their refusals to participate in an anti-God demonstration sponsored by the Mexican government?

The men and women are not only discharged, but when they peacefully attempt to assemble and petition for relief they are shot down, as at Guadalajara.

With reference to the questionnaire in dispute, why does not Mr. Lagarde give the text?

I offer in translation (being in possession of the original document) questions on section 4, "Data relative to philosophical and religious ideology" of the questionnaire, the answers to which are demanded of all employes of the institution and applicants for relief:

(a) What religion do you profess?

(b) In what exercises of piety and devotion do you engage?

(c) Before 20 years of age were you subject to the practice and doctrine of religion?

(d) At what age did you consider yourself emancipated from confession and religious exercises?

(e) To what organizations or institutions, religious or secular, do you belong?

(f) To what societies or institutions did you formerly belong?

(g) Were you actually affiliated with any secret society? Which one?

(h) How many children have you in school (7 to 15 years)?

(i) Please note the name and place of the school or schools in which they attend.

(j) Have you or did you ever have near relatives who exercise or have exercised any religious ministry? In case answer is in affirmative, please give names and degree of kindred.

(k) If you do not take part in any religious creed, please explain synthetically your philosophico, moral criterion of such an attitude.

Perhaps Mr. Lagarde can offer some explanation why these very intimate questions are asked.

ANDREW J. COONEY, Jr.
Washington, April 26.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Whenever the Mexican government finds itself in a particularly tight corner, it issues a hurried invitation to some nationally known American. In the religious crisis about six years ago Col. Lindbergh and Will Rogers were lavishly entertained at government expense. In the present crisis Miss Amelia Earhart has accepted the repeated invitations of Emilio Portes Gil to visit Mexico.

These invitations are issued for two reasons: to hoodwink the Mexicans into believing that the fair-minded American people are solidly behind the present Mexican government; and secondly, to throw dust into the eyes of the American people.

Miss Earhart states that Diego Rivera is a "prophet honored in his own country, whose people and aspirations he portrays with artistic sweep of color and line." I prefer to think that Miss Earhart possesses about as much knowledge of Mexico as Mr. Daniels of diplomacy.

JOHN J. O'CONNOR.

Fan Who Remembers.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read with much interest in Monday's paper your article regarding Dan Casey of "Casey at the Bat" fame. All my life I have been interested in baseball. It was 50 years ago. As a boy I was anxious to see a professional baseball pitcher.

Residing about 75 miles from Philadelphia, I made the trip and on this day the Phillies were playing the Detroit club, which at that time had the celebrated "Big Four"—Dan Brouthers, Sam Thompson, Hardie Richardson and Rowe.

Talk about a "murderer's row!" Why when a pitcher faced this bunch he had the creeps. Casey's catcher that day was "Big Jim" McGuire. Detroit had the famous "pretzel battery" of Getzein and Ganzell.

Casey was practically a midget among those giants of the diamond and the way he mowed those fellows down always left a great impression on my mind. When I read the articles on Casey, which said he was living here, I just couldn't resist writing a line to let the old boy know that there's one baseball fan who never forgets.

I also remember seeing Ferguson, his pitching partner, who also was a great twirler in his day. The two pitched practically all the games and to the best of my recollection "Sid" Farrar, the father of Geraldine Farrar, the singer, held down first base; Dunlap, second base; Irwin, shortstop; Mulvey, third base; Sam Wood, left field; Ed Andrews, center field; Fogarty, right field, and Harry Wright, manager.

On several occasions I heard De-Wolf Hopper recite the famous "Casey at the Bat." I hope Casey will enjoy seeing the Nats win many games now that he has taken up his residence here.

Sob Sister For Jobless?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Why would not a good work-relief project be to pay those who have been fruitlessly tramping the streets for four years looking for work? I have worked harder and worn out more shoes than many who have been drawing good salaries during that time, with husbands holding down good jobs, too.

Can't you devote a column to the jobless? It seems that the Government clerks have had more than their due, when all the Washington papers are weeping barrels of ink because they were deprived of a part of their salaries, which has been restored to them. We jobless should employ a sob sister or brother reporter to dramatize our cause. Would you give us space to tell how frightfully we have been treated by Uncle Sam?

I went to the FERA to apply for a job and was told that they did not expect to add many employes—they have about all the office force they need. At the AAA the much-harassed personnel officer declared he had nothing to offer. At the HOLC they declared they were dropping rather than taking on new people. At the PWA a wearied-looking personnel clerk declared that their organization was already set up and they did not expect to take on many more. Was the great works-relief bill merely an alibi? G. G.

To Protect Congress.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Now that President Roosevelt's program is working out, and the future looks O. K., the Manufacturers Association, Chambers of Commerce and other agencies demand to be let alone so they can resume their schemes of exploitation.

The best thing that could happen to us would be for the aforementioned agencies, together with the labor-faking racketeers and others, to clear out of Washington and take their threatening hands off. Congress should not be molested by these propagandists.

The Post Impressionist

The Ogre Of The Eighties.

Post Office, Friday.

It is a pleasure for the Column to agree with the sentiments of a literary editorial published in the columns adjacent—a pleasure the greater for being none too common. So we are glad to commend our brothers' Tuesday utterance upon the author of "Germinal."

That editorial was really a creditable bit of constructive criticism. It stimulates us to attempt variations upon its theme.

Half a century has passed since the publication of Zola's novel about the miners—the first novel of its sort ever published anywhere. Paris, therefore, has been having one formal Zola celebration at the big Trocadero. The French miners' union has been having another—though our editorial neighbors neglected to mention it—at little Denain, where are laid most of the scenes of this story which, in 1885, shook both the esthetic and economic worlds.

Writing for Paris-Soir, Mme. Denise Le Blond-Zola, the novelist's daughter, says she considers "Germinal" her father's chef-d'oeuvre. Nor is she without some authority for her opinion: the graceful Jules Lemaitre didn't hesitate to compare that book with the Iliad—50 years ago.

But half-a-century works changes—if not always for the better, at least stringent changes. Lemaitre, more's the pity, is no longer read even for his own sake: his impressionistic criticism has been, in France, ousted by so-called scientific criticism. There was a period when—again more's the pity—every book that Zola wrote was acclaimed by the radical reviewers and devoured by the radical public. Now radicalism has altered radically.

Zola's own story was the one most familiar among French literary innovators: the garret-toil of Balzac, the bitter struggle for recognition won when recognition had lost its savor. His style was generally turgid; his diction was never pure. His Rougon-Maquart series did establish him, except with the Academy, but not even the triumph of this acclaimed "Germinal" came soon enough for solace to his finally embittered pride and for unqualified acceptance by an already onrushing generation.

What about "L'Assommoir?" This bludgeon dealt hard liquor such a literary blow that our Prohibition friends—instead of being repelled by its women fighting in a public laundry or by the degradation of poor lame Gervaise—ought to distribute it to every legislature.

What about the brief "Attack on the Mill?" It is nearly as strong an assault on war as Tolstoy's "War and Peace"—far stronger than Zola's other peace-document, "Le Debacle," without which such an insipid novel as "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" would never never have been written.

The cheap blasphemy scattered through "La Terre" is schoolboyish but, in construction, that novel is tremendous; it is a well-nigh perfect circle. And in "Therese Raquin" there occurs a moment close to the knocking on the door in "Macbeth"—when the paralytic-mute mother attempts, in the presence of the guilty parties, to write the truth about her son's murder by his wife and her lover.

However, these uneven works marked Zola's zenith. Rapidly, he lost three things:

He lost his fire—overburdened by the conviction that he had a social message, he became ponderous: "Paris" and "Lourdes" are unreadable.

He lost the following that had regarded him as a realistic prophet: the very real-estate venture against which he inveighed in "Rome" grew to success and mocked him.

He lost, finally, his chief attraction for the lighter-minded: he could no longer startle. The sins of the flesh are severely limited in number; they have all been committed since the beginning of the race, and, by Zola's late date, nobody could invent new ones. After he had used every shock that existed, the world grew temporarily tired of being shocked.

He isn't immortal to the prevailing modern eye: to that eye, "Nana" is as mild as, to the eye of the Eighties, it wasn't. But his picture of life is unrealistic in that it is unbalanced. Our present-day realists owe some of their worst artistic errors to him. He founded the Naturalistic School—and its naturalism was unnatural.

"Tommy hasn't lasted," wrote Barrie of his sentimental hero. Neither has this unsentimental Zola. A very few years after his death, he ceased to be an author and became a name. Semicentennial celebrations can do no more for him than preserve him as one of those novelists whose books few read and all hate to confess they haven't.

Deflated Bob.

ALTHOUGH the roll call shows Senator Bob Wagner as having voted against the motion which in effect killed the so-called anti-lynching bill, it is doubtful if any man in the Senate was more happy over the outcome. During the last several days of the debate or, rather, the filibuster, the expression on his face was one of acute pain. The gentleman had a bull by the tail and he couldn't turn loose, which any student of affairs will tell you is an awful predicament for a man to be in.

That Bob should come to be in such a predicament as this is no surprise at all to those who have observed his penchant for doing interesting things. Hardly had he come to the Senate than he began doing interesting things, and he has been doing them ever since. The anti-lynching bill was perhaps the most interesting thing he ever undertook. It turned out to be entirely too interesting, so interesting, in fact, that long before the matter was decided Bob's sole interest was in how to extricate himself.

• • • •

It is not that the eradication of lynching is not a very high objective, of course. It is simply that the debate showed how little Bob knew what he was talking about and raised the question in many minds as to whether he is equally informed in the other interesting things he undertakes. Any one having any knowledge of the situation knew that Bob's bill would not prevent lynching but in all likelihood would increase it. The bill was sponsored not by the Negro's real friends but by professional reformers instead. It was when the debate put Bob, the doer of so many interesting things, in the professional reforming light that he was hurt and anxious to evolve some way of getting out.

It got so bad that Bob could not remain in the Senate chamber. Observers said they never had known the time when he found so much to occupy him elsewhere.

What he had done at the outset, of course, was to take a bill from the secretary of the Association for the Advancement of the Negro Race and embrace it as he does all interesting things. When the Southern Senators asked why he was so greatly concerned in a crime which was being rapidly marked out instead of the rampant gang and other crimes of his native city, Bob had either to leave the chamber or blush. And then when the same Southern Senators threatened to tell that his real concern was the votes of Harlem it was for him too much.

This hurt because it put Bob in a light he has not been in before. He came to the Senate with the prestige of a high magistrate, and whose sole desire was to uplift his fellow man and to bring surcease to his many ills. The New York newspaper boys gave him a good send-off and told their colleagues that when Bob Wagner made a speech they should listen to it carefully because he was no politician. He was a statesman with his sole ambition to do what was right.

And with this sort of a build-up Bob has been doing many things for the benefit of the people such as the NRA and section 7(a). And he has another bill pending, the Wagner labor disputes bill, which should prove a boon to humanity in that it will keep the employer and employe at each other's neck with the latter getting the worst of it in the end. These are only two uplifting measures of Bob's which come readily to mind. He has been associated prominently, as a matter of fact, with nearly every fad that has come along in the past two years. His espousal of the "advanced thinking" antilynching bill was a case of having taken up just one interesting thing too much.

• • • •

You see, it would make no difference if it were to be said of a lot of the Senators that they were doing something simply to get votes. The majority of them make no bones about votes being just exactly what they like to have. Like as not if you were to say to one, "You are just doing this to get votes," he would retort quite merrily, "Well, what do you think I'm doing it for, to get asthma?"

That's the way the Senators, generally, are. But Bob—the suggestion that votes would influence him didn't help his prestige at all. Why, he's just another Senator.

Pessimism Noted In Philippines As Vote On Constitution Looms

By Vincente Albano Pacis.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Manila.

SIGNING of the Philippine Constitution by President Roosevelt and the impending inauguration of the commonwealth government, tentatively set for September 15 this year, have brought definite form to a pervading feeling of pessimism in this country. While it is impossible to expect that in the plebiscite to be held May 14 the Filipino electorate will reject the constitution and thus refuse independence, well-informed students of the situation go as far as to venture the belief that if a responsible Filipino leader were to lead the opposition to the constitution, now confined to the more radical groups, the constitution would stand a fair chance of being rejected.

The situation, of course, is not lacking in factors making for optimism. There is the sentimental glow which the Filipinos must feel with the impending realization of a lofty racial objective—nationhood. There is also the mathematical fact, already computed by the apostles of a new optimism, that while the Philippines, because of the different restrictions newly imposed on Philippine products entering the American market, will probably suffer a total loss of 60,000,000 pesos this year, the Philippine government will receive from the Federal Government gold refund, compensating and excise taxes approximately 120,000,000 pesos. As a net result of the changes in Philippine-American economic relations now beginning to take effect, the Philippines, it is pointed out, will benefit rather than suffer.

HOWEVER, to the more thoughtful observers, the figures dangled can have no validity beyond this year. Philippine sugar producers, for instance, are being limited this year to approximately one-half of their former production. They have had to limit areas and destroy excess crops. Receiving compensation in full, they have done both with pleasure. But next year they will in all probability continue to operate under the same restrictions but without any possibility of receiving compensation checks from Washington. Then they will come to know life's real storm and stress.

Aside from the temporary panaceas of the compensating and excise taxes, there are facts of the new Philippine situation which portend great difficulties ahead. They are, to be sure, plainly materialistic considerations, but as Frank Vanderlip once said: "All statesmanship is simply an effort to answer the prayer for daily bread."

For instance, it is a practical certainty that when the commonwealth government is inaugurated, government salaries will be slashed radically and universally. When this happens, private business will certainly follow suit. The certainty that, in spite of a general drop in values and incomes, taxes will increase is another consideration which is not thoroughly relished even by those who are for soaking the rich.

And perhaps most potent of all the factors making for a general feeling of pessimism is the failure of Congress to modify the economic provisions of the independence law.

THE Philippine constitution which President Roosevelt has just signed provides that the salary of a member of the Commonwealth Legislature shall be $5,000 per annum. Compared to the present minimum salary of a Philippine legislator of 7,200 pesos per year, the new figure represents a reduction of about 33 per cent. Since, upon the convocation of the first Commonwealth Legislature, the new 5,000 pesos-per-annum legislators will undertake as their first task the reorganization of the Philippine government, one may feel certain that they will draw up a salary scale for the entire government commensurately reduced. Department secretaries, bureau chiefs, and all governme it officials and employes all down the line will feel the keen edge of the pruning knife.

Such a general salary reduction confined to the government alone would be quite enough to upset the present economic stability. In the Philippines, the more lucrative positions are in the government. But it is also a practical certainty that private establishments will not fail to take advantage of the new situation to overhaul their budgets which, in common with those of other countries, have long been showing considerable red ink. In a few months after the inauguration of the commonwealth, the general salary scale in the Philippines will be lower by about 33 per cent.

And yet, in spite of the new government economies in salary and the reduced private incomes, the Philippine government will have great need for funds. There is, for instance, the project for a national defense establishment which will henceforth occupy in the budget as prominent a part as the present items for public education. Between maintaining a standing army and providing for a universal citizen military training, the Philippines will have great need for an increasing defense budget. Add to this the equally important plan to lay the groundwork of a Philippine consular and diplomatic service as soon as possible and there results a new bottomless pit into which Filipinos must dump their taxes.

WHILE only the so-called intelligentsia may fully foresee all this, the masses certainly understand the economic difficulties which the independence law, with its economic provisions, will bring to the islands. This popular knowledge—and fear—of the law is the work of none other than the Filipino leaders, of whom Manuel L. Quezon is at the head, who campaigned for the rejection of the original independence law known as the Hare-Hawes-Cutting act. They told the people in speeches and conferences and conversations in an extended campaign from one end of the country to another that the export limitations and the export taxes imposed upon Philippine products by the United States through the law would so impoverish the Philippines that they would neither desire nor be able to maintain political independence.

Unfortunately, the same economic provisions were rewritten in the new law enacted after the rejection of the first one by the Philippine Legislature. The second independence law, to be sure, was accepted on the plain promise made by President Roosevelt that it would be revised after proper hearings and in justice to both the American and Filipino peoples. The revisions promised, nevertheless, have not been made—Congress seems to be indisposed to tinker with the law until its effects are more visible—with the result that the very fear inculcated by the original rejectionists among the Filipinos has not only remained, but has grown.

This is the general situation which the radical elements are now capitalizing in an effort to reject the constitution in the forthcoming plebiscite. While the masses are probably susceptible to influences making for rejection, the trouble with the radicals' campaign is that it has no leadership to speak of, and its reason for rejection is not based on the expected adverse results of acceptance, but rather on the hot-headed premise that the independence offered is ten years away. The radicals are not for making the frying pan a way-landing; they are for jumping straight into the fire—perhaps on the theory that sudden annihilation is preferable to long torture.

Novelist Vs. Prophet

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

THE famous writer, H. G. Wells, made what it is hoped will be his annual spring visit to the United States, stayed two or three weeks, and returned to his native land. In the spring of 1934 I had the pleasure of meeting him at dinner, and I was impressed by his radient vitality, his cheerfulness, and abundant good humor.

He is one of the few European visitors who do not come here to lecture or to tell us what we ought to do; like a first-class journalist, he comes to see if he can, what it is we are going to do.

• • • •

He spent his time during his brief visit in interviews with individual persons prominent in political life; but before he left he did consent to make a few remarks at a dinner of the Authors Club. He was reported as saying that he would not write any more books; it is surely permissible to take this with reservations, as I do not believe he can possibly prevent himself from writing books. He always speaks modestly of his own contributions to literature, saying that he is not an artist; but in this speech he seemed for a moment to regret the fact, whereas he has usually been rather proud of it.

He has now adopted the general critical opinion that his best novel is "Tono Bungay;" but it will be a long time before some dozen of his other stories are forgotten; and I think they will enter into new life on the screen. Certainly "The Invisible Man" is an immensely interesting picture.

Mr. Wells is more interesting in his discussions of the past and present than he is in his predictions or even in his desires concerning the future. Wells the novelist interests me far more than Wells the prophet.

• • • •

It is doubtless true that many things in this world need improvement; but how curious it is that the world just as we know it, with all its imperfections and tragedies, is so much more interesting and hence more attractive than any Utopia imagined by men of letters. Omar Khayyam said unctuously,

Ah, love, could you and I with him conspire
To grasp this sorry scheme of things entire,
Would we not shatter it to bits, and then
Remold it nearer to the heart's desire!

Whose heart's desire? Ay, there's the rub. I have more trust in God than in any earthly prophet from Sir Thomas More to H. G. Wells. More's "Utopia" seems dull, W. H. Hudson knew a lot about bird life, but his proposed Utopia is horrible, and in the future desired by H. G. Wells everything that interests me personally would be absent. Do you suppose I would at any moment abandon the love of art for the study of biology? the listening to music for the study of mathematics?

No End of Books

Sherwood Anderson's "Puzzled America," A Report More Optimistic Than It Would Seem.

By Theodore Hall.

IF you scurried around in your head to find the one American writer who should, by style and sympathy, be chosen as the Author-Laureate of the New Deal, it would certainly be Sherwood Anderson. And if we have not forgotten already that figure, the Forgotten Man, the reason is plain—Mr. Anderson was hymning him years ago in everything from "Windy McPherson's Son" to "Poor White," from "Winesburg, Ohio" to "Mid-American Chants." That fact, and his inconquerable allegiance to the American dream, should give Mr. Anderson the office and title.

Without any butt of Canary wine, unless you want to call acceptances by Messrs. Moley and Astor's magazine, Today, such an emolument, Mr. Anderson has taken up the direct practice of his office, has gone off in a swing around America to see what the Man on the Farm and the Girl in the Factory think of the depression and the New Deal.

What he finds, as written in "Puzzled America" (Scribner, $2.50), could scarcely be more cheering to Roosevelt 2d and cohorts if it had been turned out by an alphabetical bureau of press information. And, respecting Mr. Anderson's integrity as any confirmed reader of him naturally does, one comes to believe that the Forgotten Men and Women of the county do have the feeling which he reports in the ones he met.

Before we see what that spirit might be, let me just note that Mr. Anderson, in characteristic plain-spoken, inquiring and self-deprecatory fashion, wandered from the cotton farms and share-croppers of the deep South to the wheat fields and radicals of the Northwest. He picked up hitch-hikers and talked with them; he sat writing his notes among the miners at the head of a coal-pit; he went to bars and union meetings and the offices of country doctors. And as he says, because a writer has "no class," but a "class of his own," and—because he came of a working stock, he could enter almost everywhere, be received cordially, and above all be met with frankness.

• • • •

TYPICAL passage, to show you the touches of Andersonian description and the mood:

"The Southern roads. You got off the big highways into little red dirt roads. Houses with dog runs. Share-croppers moving. In vacant lots in some of the poor little towns The share-cropper with his family—mule buying and trading going on, a worn-out looking woman, plenty of kids, two or three hound dogs, a miserable few sticks of furniture on his broken-down wagon. Your thoughts—'Hell, they talk about no work in this country, not enough work. There's work here for a hundred years, giving life, modern life, to these millions. There is just as good stuff in these poor whites as in any people on earth.'"

That forward-looking, that optimism, if you will, is not merely his own. Perhaps the largest fact in this book is that he met it on all sides. More exactly, it is a "will to believe." Says Mr. Anderson in his introduction: "We do not want cynicism. We want belief. Can we find it in one another, in democracy, in the leadership we are likely to get out of democracy? I think that these sketches of people, as I have found them, living and working, or out of work and for the time down and out—they should at least show that there is belief here that we can. There is a willingness to believe, a hunger for belief, a determination to believe."

YOU remember a little stir in the prints not long back, about two young Harvard men being here to smooth out Huey Long's grammar and such. A bit of poppycock. But Alan Blackburn and Philip Johnson, late director and one of the curators, respectively, of the Museum of Modern Art in New York, are doing other things in the Senator's train, interested especially in fascist trends in the country. Last summer, before they met the Senator, they took a large swing around the country to feel, as it were, its fascist pulse. And they told me afterward that no one balked at the word "dictator," that there seemed in fact to be a hunger for the hard capable hand of a fascist regime.

Mr. Anderson brings quite other testimony—"fascism" is a word not even thought of among the people he saw. (Nor, by the way, is Huey Long's name reported once.) Typical opinion is this: "Let's give this democracy thing another whirl yet."

For the people, in spite of failure and hardship, still seem to have the American dream in the American way. When a man is down and out, he takes it as his own personal failing—"I wasn't smart enough . . . . I've failed in this American scheme. It's my own fault." One can somehow be proud of that notion, but its bad side is the obvious deep pang in the man's moral fiber—the loss of "that sense of being some part of the moving world of activity, so essential to the American man's sense of his manhood." Says Mr. Anderson elsewhere in the book: "In America every man who is broke, down on his luck, is half ashamed of the fact."

The obverse of that is the surge of personal optimism which Mr. Anderson met in such places as a CCC camp or a village under TVA. Even in so esoteric a PWA project as the excavation of mound dwellers' relics he found that the hillbilly workmen had taken up an enthusiasm in the work which was as keen as their liking for turkey-shoots.

The spirit, one reads and likes to believe, is all one of hardihood and innate buoyancy—material, if used, for something like a social renaissance in this country. Two passages in "Puzzled America" moved me the most, perhaps because they give a hint of the way. One was a comment on the mill girls in Elizabethton, Tenn.: "It is said that many of the girls and women are half in love with the machines t which they work. There always is the old question—to make men rise in nobility to the nobility of the machines."

And the other was merely the picture of a professional forester, one of the directors in a CCC camp, standing high on a bleak denuded mountain side and cussing the voracious lumbermen who had committed that rape. "We should have had a chance! Our men should have been here!" he cried.

Mr. Anderson shows us that, with people and jobs and social happiness, America still has a chance in its own way.

"Honest, Boss, I didn't know it was loaded!"

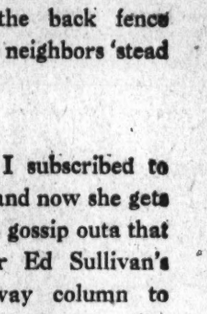
State Pensions Sought For Kent Alms Inmates

Chesterton, Md., May 2 (AP).—The board of trustees of the Kent County Almshouse is studying the State old-age pension law with a view to obtaining pensions for 17 of the inmates, who are 65 or more years old. The board points out this would reduce the cost of maintaining the almshouse.

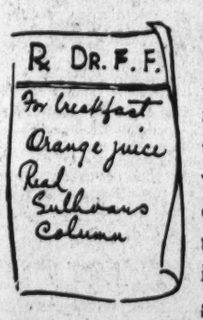
Henry Jones, who was sad and downcast for many years, is a happy man now. "It's this way," explains Hank. "It uster be when I got home I hadda eat outa cans or buy a hamburger down at Joe's hash-house. You see, the missus loved gossip and she spent her afternoons hangin' over the back fence tradin' scandal with the neighbors 'stead of gettin' supper.

"But I fixed that. I subscribed to The Washington Post and now she gets enough gossip outa that feller Ed Sullivan's Broadway column to last her all day. She says he sure knows how to tell things, all right."

But Ed Sullivan is not just a gossip-teller, a keyhole listener-inner, a Peeping Tom with a typewriter. Ed chronicles the doings of that biggest of all hick towns, New York. With Broadway and Forty-second street as his base of operations, Sullivan stops (briefly), looks (intently), and listens (long). The result is a column of news and gossip . . . those little whispers which later roar at you from the front page headlines.



Another nice thing about Ed Sullivan's Broadway column is that it is written for the reader . . . and not just to high-hat some other columnist. We know a college professor who once spent months translating what he termed "Broadwayese." For instance, he learned that "The Umphs who middle-aisled it Choosday yawning, phhht! yesdy. He's carrying the torch for a certain revusical eye-full now" really means that Mr. and Mrs. Umph, who were married last Tuesday, have parted, and that Mr. Umph is now in love with a chorus girl. But when you read Sullivan, you won't have to be a college professor to understand what he means . . . for Sullivan's lines have sparkle, snap and wit . . . and he doesn't depend upon a tortured pun to pack a wallop.



"Broadway," as seen through Ed Sullivan's slightly cynical but ever-interesting eyes, is as breezy as a cocktail party, as smart as a Noel Coward comedy, as entertaining as a ringside table. Not to read Ed Sullivan's column right after downing your orange juice each morning is to miss a lot of fun. Sullivan doesn't tell the news behind the headlines . . . he tells the news ahead of the headlines . . . and tells it five mornings each week in had reason to suspect that a force which Hooker had dispatched below Fredericksburg projected a feint. So he left Gen. Early there, with 10,000 men to oppose the enemy's 40,000, and himself moved up the Rappahannock after Hooker.

On the afternoon of May 1 Anderson's division moved westward toward Chancellorsville, and McLaws marched up in support. A brisk skirmish ensued on the morning of May 1, when these troops obstructed the Federal advance. Gen. Hooker ordered his forces to fall back on Chancellorsville, where they entrenched.

Then the campfire council of the Southern commanders. Lee and Jackson, holding the last conference they were ever to hold, decided to throw Jackson's entire corps of 28,000 to 30,000 men against the exposed right of the enemy. It was an operation that staked desperately to win—or lose. Division of his inferior army into three parts! Such an operation was utter military folly.

Jackson Rides Away.

Jackson made his dispositions and early the next morning rode down the Catherine Furnace road in pursuance of his mission. "He rode away like a Norse god," said Dr. Freeman.

The lecturer—distinguished biographer of Lee—had brought the battle to this stage, as he stood before a massive map, red pointer in hand. Then the Southern troops appeared, the V. M. I. cadets, wearing gray uniforms and crushed campaign hats of the sixties. They swung silently along, in route step, lean, bronzed boys with fixed bayonets. One of Lee's veterans, watching, said suddenly:

"Old Jack took exactly that route with his boys."

The cadets, under command of Maj. Bertrand Morrow, U. S. Army, disappeared into the green woods. Under Maj. Morrow, Cadet Capt. G. W. Carpenter, of Johnson City, Tenn., led the line of march.

The watching veteran, Capt. John M. Cunningham, 92, of Culpeper, saw them go. He had commanded a company of artillery for "Old Jack."

Now the scene shifts. Dr. Freeman, taking up position with the crowds at Fairview Heights, the succeeding episode in the contest, traced the movements of Jackson. It is now the morning of May 3. Stuart has succeeded to the command of the Second Corps, since Jackson fell in his successful charge.

Yonder at Hazel Grove, a mile away, 25 rebel guns set up a roar. The blue are intrenched on Fairview. A brisk artillery duel precedes a charge of the Stonewall Brigade.

The battleground has now become a bedlam. Crackle of musketry, thunder of cannon and over all the heavy pall of smoke. The blue infantry repulses the gray. Again and again the defenders of Fairview roll back the attackers. Then reinforcements for the Confederates, and they sweep the trenches.

A swift courier rides swiftly to notify Hooker, at the Chancellor House, that Fairview has fallen. The field is dotted with wounded men. A shrill, fiendish yelling cuts through the din of the guns: "Haaaiah—Haaaiah!" It is the dread rebel yell—and the boys from V. M. I. have perfected themselves in it.

Marines Too Realistic.

The Federals had resisted vigorously. Under supreme command of Col. F. B. Price, Fifth Regiment, Fleet Marine Force, and commanded on the field by Lieut. Col. Oliver Floyd, they charged and retreated as the men in those gun pits had done before them. In a sense, it was too realistic. Here and there a shell backfired. Sergt. J. O'Connor and Privates A. A. George, S. B. Kissane and E. L. Ahl, of Battery A, U. S. M. C., suffered slight injuries. They were taken to the base hospital at Quantico.

The cavalry let glamour. There were 240 officers and men, 200 horses, and there were armored cars. The squadron commander was Maj. A. P. Thayer; Capt. Duke commanded Troop E; Capt. Allen, Troop F; Capt. Palmer, the Machine Gun Troop and Lieut. Mannsfield, the Headquarters Troop.

The Fredericksburg Park committee, Frank M. Chichester, chairman, cooperating with Branch Spalding, superintendent of the Battlefield Park, was in charge of the show.

Boy Was With Jackson.

Veterans who saw the re-enactment, besides Capt. Cunningham, were W. H. Pugh, 99, who enlisted in 1864, saw service in the Wilderness and was thereafter captured, and Lieut. L. W. Cox. Mrs. Sue Chancellor, who as a girl of 14 lived in the Chancellor House when it was headquarters for Hooker, came and looked upon the clearing where once her home stood. But the story of the day was told to his companions by William S. Johnson, of 808 Charlotte street, Fredericksburg.

"I was not more than 300 yards away when General Jackson was wounded," he said. "I was a boy of 9 years then and we lived near Ely's Ford. Our home had been taken as headquarters for the Confederate generals and on the night General Jackson was shot he came there and asked my father to go with him so he could find some woods roads that the Yankees didn't know about. My father was a great hunter. He knew every road in that section and someone who lived nearby had told the general about it.

"But my father wasn't feeling well and my mother didn't want him to go. Of course, he couldn't refuse, because they would have made him go, so when my mother found he had to go she asked Gen. Jackson if I could go along, too, to be with my father when he came back.

"We rode along several roads and finally came close to the Plank road. My father was guiding the party. But when we got near the road Gen. Jackson told us not to go any farther. We stopped and waited, and the party, Gen. Jackson and the others, rode on. Less than half an hour later we heard the sound of shots. We didn't know what they were at first, but later, it must have been several hours afterward, we rode out on the road and Gen. Jackson was lying there wounded. They picked him up and put him in an ambulance just as we came along.

"I reckon I am one of the last people living in this section who saw Gen. Jackson after he was wounded."

The old gentlemen recollected clearly the "horrible sights" of that bloody field. "There were places in the thickets," he said, "where you could walk a hundred yards without touching ground, the dead were lying so thick. Bullets, guns, cannon balls, clothing, belts, canteens and sabers matted the field."

He remembered Gen. Lee. "I saw Gen. Lee lots of times," Johnson went on. "I held his horse for him. What must have been his feelings when he learned of Jackson's mortal wound?"

His 'Right Arm' Gone.

There isn't any doubt what Lee thought. Lee had lost his "right arm." Lee earnestly wished he could lie in Jackson's place "for the good of the country." These things the great commander said. In his heart the words of the lectionary must have tolled:

"Oh, Jonathan, thou wast slain in thine high places" . . .

But the death of the Cromwellian schoolmaster who developed into a genius of war did not stay the ardor or quench the spirit of the Army of Northern Virginia. Many years ago Mary Johnston, the novelist, reported the words of the gray philosopher who passed by "Old Tom's" bier:

"Hail, great man of the past! If today you consort with Caesar, tell him we still make war."

Civic, military and commercial organizations of the Shenandoah-Potomac-Cumberland apple belt of Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia and Pennsylvania will participate.

The school children's parade this morning was arranged in groups to depict the passing of winter and the return of spring, with a miniature apple blossom festival as the chief motif.

'Crime Czar's' Life Menaced By Assassins

By the Associated Press.

Providence, R. I., May 2.—The empire of crime which investigators charge Carl Rettich ruled from his Warwick stronghold continued to crumble today as his bonds were tightened and additional alleged plunder was brought to light.

Adding to the woes of the harried czar was knowledge that he was probably safer in custody than out, for five imported gangsters have come to town. Department of Justice men recognized four of them as New York gunmen and said they were informed the visitors had been summoned here to assasssinate Rettich when he should be brought from the county jail to the Federal Building.

That was why Rettich was arraigned today in the warden's office at the State prison instead of at the Federal Building. He pleaded not guilty to a charge of armed robbery of a postal truck at Fall River, Mass., last January, from which $129,000 was stolen. As he was already held in default of $125,000 on a charge of conspiracy to rob the mails, no additional bail was set.

Bail to Be Increased.

However, if he should raise bail set on the original charge, additional bail would be immediately demanded, J. Howard McGrath, United States attorney, said. There are other charges which might be brought against Rettich, but the ace in the Government's hand, Federal men said, was the Lindbergh law.

Federal officers said they could base a charge of violating that law on the "spot" slaying of Andino Merola, jr., Providence gangster, whose body was found in Wrentham, Mass., last Friday. Under that charge release under bail would be denied.

Since Monday a force of officers and workmen have been engaged in tearing apart Rettich's shore villa at Warwick and digging up the grounds. An arsenal in machine guns and other weapons and a considerable portion of the Fall River loot have been found there.

McGrath declared a considerable quantity of jewelry also was found on the night of the raid last Friday.

He had withheld announcement of the jewelry apparently for the arrival of Gloucester, Mass., officers who hope to charge the gang with a $327,000 jewel robbery there last summer.

Loot Inspected.

City Marshal Daniel M. Casey, of Gloucester, and two special officers inspected the jewelry today, but apparently it was not immediately identified as part of the fortune in gems taken by fashionably attired machine gunners who robbed the Hodgson-Kennard jewelry store in the Magnolia summer colony last July.

The jewelry consisted of a diamond bracelet and loose stones. McGrath said the bracelet probably was worth about $2,500 and the entire collection a "few thousand."

The Gloucester officers expressed the conviction that one at least of the score or more alleged members of the gang now in custody participated in the jewel robbery.

Gov. Theodore F. Green today took a hand in the investigation by directing Attorney General John P. Hartigan to determine why the Warwick police were officially oblivious of the existence of Rettich's fortified headquarters.

Tipped that the body of Daniel Walsh, Rettich's partner of the rum-running era, would be found on the estate, excavations both on the estate and in surrounding tracts were continued.

Walsh was reported kidnaped about two years ago and about $40,000 was paid as ransom, but he has never since been seen.

Citizens Back Musser's Plan On New Bridge

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Shepherdstown, W. Va., May 2.—Strong support has been given C. S. Musser, editor of the Shepherdstown Independent, by citizens of Jefferson, Berkeley and Morgan counties on his proposal for a James Rumsey Memorial bridge at Shepherdstown.

Musser has stated public demand for elimination of traffic hazards has suggested a proposed route for the bridge that would eliminate two dangerous curves on the Maryland side of the river and make the project a straight gradeless route of scenic beauty.

It was stated the builders could utilize the project to honor Rumsey, who revolutionized water transportation, making his experiments near the route proposed by Mr. Musser.

The route suggested by Delegate U. S. Martin does not eliminate the dangerous curve on the Maryland side of the river, Mr. Musser stated.

Funds for acquisition of the present highway bridge over the Potomac River can not come from the Federal grant of $345,500, Mr. Musser explained following a statement from M. L. O'Neale, State PWA engineer, at his office in Charleston Monday, but must come from another fund under control of the West Virginia and Maryland road commissions, which would create additional expense.

Using what is known as the "Martin route," this expenditure would be greatly increased and would not eliminate road hazards. Mr. Musser takes the view that a better and cheaper route could be created, eliminating dangerous curves and grades on both sides of the river, by using either the Rumsey avenue or Rumsey park routes.

Thomas Flays Terror Reign Of Huey Long

Warns of a Massacre in Arkansas on Visit to White House.

Norman Thomas, the Socialist leader, yesterday attacked Huey Long in the course of a call at the White House in which he protested to President Roosevelt against the "reign of terror" existing in Arkansas.

Declaring that conditions in that section of the South will lead to "wholesale massacre" unless the Government steps in, Thomas asserted:

"There is worse misery on Huey's doorstep than anywhere else in the United States, and he hasn't lifted a finger. The Negro sharecropper killed down there wore his button, 'Every Man a King.'

"Huey hasn't done a thing, and yet he is the real political overlord of Arkansas, not Joe Robinson. Unless Robinson finds a place on the Supreme Court between now and the next election, he will be one badly licked man."

3 Bequests of President.

The Socialist former candidate for President said he had asked three things of Mr. Roosevelt:

"First, we want an open investigation of what has actually happened down there. It is not known now. There has been terror, night-riding and at least one murder in cold blood.

"Secondly, we want revision of the cotton contract, Section 7, which pretends to protect tenant farmers but has no less than four loopholes for violation. And we want enforcement.

"Third, we ask support of amendments to the Wagner labor bill or the agricultural adjustment act to give share-croppers the right and protection to organize."

Places Blame for Trouble.

Thomas declared that the large planters "and a few preachers" have been causing the trouble in Arkansas by trying to break up the organization of tenant farmers into the Southern Tenant Farmers Union. He said that Senator Robinson has been deaf to their pleas.

As for the President's reaction, the Socialist said:

"I am at least a little more encouraged than I have been on other occasions on leaving the Department of Agriculture."

Thomas said the present Bankhead farm-tenant bill would not solve the problem. The effect of this bill, he said, would be "to bale out insurance companies, the landlords and the land-poor, but it won't help the share-cropper."

SEC Eases Plan For Advertising Stocks, Bonds

Kennedy Sees 15 Million National Distillers' Issue Hopeful Sign.

The Securities and Exchange Commission yesterday took action to ease the restrictions on newspaper financial advertising by materially reducing the amount of data required to appear in such announcements.

Chairman Joseph Kennedy described this as a step "which would put financial advertising back into the newspapers."

At the same time, he saw a hopeful sign in the SEC announcement of a new $15,000,000 4½ per cent debenture issue by the National Distillers Products Corporation, which the commission approved. Of this issue $10,000,00 is "new money" for working capital, the largest amount of new capital issue authorized by the commission since it relaxed restrictions on registration forms early this year. The great bulk of issues hitherto approved were for refunding purposes.

Hits At Swindlers.

A third step taken by the commission yesterday struck at swindlers operating through sale of oil and gas interests, commonly called "royalties," which are being pushed by a horde of illegitimate operators. Some 3,000 are reported by the commission to be selling such paper in New York City alone. Investors are given the impression they are purchasing oil royalties, but a high percentage of the transactions are described as swindles. The commission hopes through publicity and registration of the sellers of such securities to drive the fakers out of business.

Explaining its new and less stringent regulations governing newspaper advertising of new stock and bond issues, the commission said:

"The instructions are drawn with a view to making possible a newspaper prospectus of about the compass of the advertisement used before the passage of the securities act."

Under the new rule, an advertiser may describe a financial offering in less detail. Especially, it revokes requirements for the printing of financial statements and schedules.

Must Make Facts Available.

"The requirements are such," the commission said, "that the offering advertisement, as permitted, will not purport to give complete information. A statement is required calling attention of the prospective investor to the fact that complete informaion may be had from the registration statement and the prospectus.

"Further, a statement is required to the effect that the issue, though registered, is not approved by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

"The purpose of this last statement is to warn investors that the registration of a new issue with the commission is not to be regarded as an indication of approval by the commission."

The commission said "newspaper prospectuses" as used in the instructions applies only to newspaper and periodical advertisements and not to reprints, reproductions or detached copies of the advertisements.

Publishers Laud Action.

In New York the new regulation concerning financial advertising was hailed by a special committee of the American Newspaper Publishers Association as a "distinct forward step * * * to protect investors without unnecessary interference with honest industry and finance."

The committee said "the regulation will be an important factor in stimulating the flow of investment funds into industry. It is a logical step forward in the program of the commission * * * which has already resulted within the last few weeks in greatly increased volume of private financing."

The special committee has cooperated on the problem with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

"Under the regulation issuers and underwriters may now advertise securities at reasonable length without incurring additional liability. Difficulties which have existed in preparaton of copy are removed," a statement of the committee said. "The advertiser is not required to include balance sheet or profit and loss statement."

Alarmed by the flood of illegitimate operators into the field of oil and gas interests and desirous of both curtailing them and giving protection to the legitimate dealers, the SEC has promulgated a new series of regulations, effective May 19, the net effect of which will be that if offerings under $100,000 are to obtain exemption from the securities act, as they do at present, the issuers must present all material facts both to the commission and to the prospective investor.

An "offering sheet" has been created. This follows the same form as an ordinary prospectus and must be filled out by the sellers. Such a procedure has previously been required from the sale of landowners' royalty interests and the outstanding feature of the new control is that it will now apply to working or lease interests, overriding royalties and oil payments, a field in which, Kennedy said "We have reason to believe a lot of stuff which is bad is being sold."

In short, what the commission is seeking to do is to set up here a huge "clearing house" of data on all types of oil interests. This information will be made directly available to investors and as such will offer prospective buyers data on what they propose to buy, but, more importantly, as Kennedy said, through study of the offering sheets "the SEC hopes to be of great help to investors." The obvious implication is that the commission will investigate misstatements in the sheets and will work to drive out of the business the "swindling element."

Working N. Y. and California.

The commission action, it was said, has been necessitated by knowledge that its exemptions to interests other than landowners' royalities has resulted in fraudulent dealers concentrating in orperations in that field. To date there has been no check on what they have been selling.

The East, with New York the focal point, and California, are now centers, Kennedy said, of illegitimate operations in the oil and gas interest fields, He pointed out that since in many States the royalties are not considered as securities and are, therefore, not subject to regulation by State commissions, the investors' protection has been neglected.

Of significance in the announcement is the revelation that in the near future the commission will require all oil royalty dealers to register. The registration, Kennedy indicated, will form a part of the attempt by the SEC to bring all brokers and dealers not members of the exchange under Federal control. The general regulations, known as the over-the-country rules, are now ready, he said, and will be announced in the next few days. Hand-in-hand with this promulgation will come the beginning of registration of oil royalty dealers, thus bringing under the Federal authority directly, all classes of brokers, including exchange members, over-the-counter brokers and dealers and oil royalty dealers.

Suicide Notes Disclose Love For Policeman

'Can't Give Carroll Up,' Girl Wrote Father to Explain Tragedy.

Two notes which Miss Bessie Carter, pretty 31-year-old brunette, left behind explained the motive for the murder and suicide which threw the quiet rooming house at 638 Park road northwest into confusion early yesterday morning when she killed Policeman Carroll N. House, 40, of the Tenth Precinct, and then turned the gun on herself.

The notes, found by police in her room after the tragedy, were addressed to her father, Charles E. Carter, manager of a farm at Laurel Miss., Rappahannock County, Va., and to her landlady at the rooming house, Mrs. George N. Grant.

In the note to her father she told how she planned to kill House and then herself when she went home to borrow her father's .32 Colt revolver Wednesday. She asked his forgiveness.

"I hated to do this," she said, "but it is all for love, and I can't give Carroll up. I love Carroll. We must go together."

In the note to Mrs. Grant she said she had "stood it as long as I could."

Three Shots Fired Rapidly.

The shooting occurred shortly after 6 a. m. on the second floor of the house where both House and Miss Carter lived. The policeman had gone to the bathroom to shave before reporting for duty at 7 o'clock at the Tenth Precinct, which is only a block from the house.

As members of the Grant family reconstruct the tragedy, Miss Carter, who was a bookkeeper for the Goodacre restaurants, tiptoed quietly out of her room, which is next to the bathroom, caught the unsuspecting House with his back turned and emptied three shots in rapid succession into his body.

House rushed down the narrow hall to his room, at the front of the house, his assailant firing wildly after him.

He cried to his cousin, James M. Grant, who occupied the room with him: "I'm shot! Get some help." Then he slumped down at the top of the stairs.

Miss Carter, meanwhile, had pointed the gun at her heart and fired. The bullet took immediate effect. The policeman, however, was still breathing several minutes later when the ambulance arrived. He died on the way to Garfield Hospital.

Friends for Years.

The two, it was learned, had been friends for several years. Last fall they had moved to the Grant house, arriving at different times. House's waning love, it was explained by the Grants, drove Miss Carter insanely jealous.

Miss Carter's body was claimed by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Carter. It will be buried Saturday at their home in Virginia.

Funeral services for Policeman House will be held tomorrow at 2 p. m. at the Greenwich Church, Greenwich, Va., where Mr. and Mrs. H. M. House, the dead man's parents, reside.

2 Pct. Loans Rate Action Deferred

Sub-Committee to Seek More Testimony.

The judiciary sub-committee of the House District Committee yesterday opened hearings on the District small loans bill, but postponed action for further hearings. Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman and People's Counsel William A. Roberts were the chief witnesses.

The bill, which has been reported favorably by the Senate District Committee, would raise the legal interest rate on small loans in the District from 1 to 2 per cent a month and would permit the charging of a fee of $1.50 on loans up to $35 for 30 days.

While the bill doubles the legal rate of interest, Prettyman explained that the present low rate has driven the legitimate small lenders out of business in the District with the consequence that Washingtonians are forced to borrow at the 3½ per cent rate in Virginia or Maryland or go to loan sharks in the Capital.

The Texan also praised "early American principles of rugged individualism" and assailed phases of the New Deal program.

U. S. Colleges Hit At P.-T. A. Parley

Convention Told Schools '40 Years Behind Times.'

By the Associated Press.

Miami, Fla., May 2.—The National Congress of Parents and Teachers today heard a speaker charge that American colleges "are teaching 40 years behind the times instead of 10 years ahead."

Delegates to the thirty-ninth annual convention here of the congress were told by B. H. Darrow, of Columbis, Ohio, national chairman for radio, that "the school is behind the times that doesn't use the newspaper and radio along with textbooks.

Instruction which fails to gain the voluntary interest of the child, Darrow said, will have little lasting effect.

Mrs. William T. Bannerman, of Washington, chairman of the legislative committee, presided over the discussion of measures now pending in the national Congress. No action was taken, this being left for the board of managers tomorrow.

Regulation of trade practices, the prohibition of bloc-booking and blind buying of motion pictures, and the Copeland food and drug act, were discussed.

Son Questioned On Weinelt's Murder Alibi

Testifies in Matt Slaying at Upper Marlboro; State Rests.

Stolid and emotionless, Frank Weinelt, middle-aged Cedarville, Md., farmer, sat in the circuit courtroom in Upper Marlboro yesterday and heard the State try to prove he had killed his old farmer friend and fellow-German, August Matt, in the yard of Matt's farm on the night of last Christmas Eve.

Only once did a tremor pass across his swarthy face, and that came when his 19-year-old son, Leo, testified, under State questioning, that:

"Father told me to say he had been in bed all evening if anybody inquired."

That, Leo Weinelt said, happened just after his father had brought the family's light delivery truck back after being away for 10 or 15 minutes after 6 p. m. on the night of the shooting. Matt's body was found at 6:20 p. m.

Tells of "Slight Quarrel."

Just before the son testified, Weinelt's former housekeeper, Mrs. Mita Brodhaute, had sought to show that Weinelt and Matt were close friends.

Reluctantly, under the questioning of Frank Hall, co-prosecutor with State's Attorney Alan Bowie, she had told of "a very slight quarrel" between the two men on December 15, when she left Weinelt's home to become Matt's housekeeper.

But when she described how she had seen a car in the Matt yard just before the shooting, Mrs. Brodhaute hurried her words to tell State Senator Lansdale G. Sasscer, defense attorney then questioning, that the car was not Weinelt's truck. And the man she had seen in the obscurity of the evening, next to the truck, was not Weinelt, she said. The man was short. Weinelt is tall.

A Brandywine clerk, Charles Willet, said Weinelt had bought a box of No. 7½ Winchester shells that afternoon and that he had heard him say to a bystander that he would "like to have something that will kill."

Ballistics Expert Testifies.

A Winchester shell, empty, was found near Weinelt's truck the same night when police arrived, County Sergt. Arthur W. Hepburn testified. Bullets taken from Matt's body were No. 7½ Winchester shot, a Justice Department ballistics expert, Donald J. Parsons, testified.

The final witness for the State was William Burroughs, of Marlboro. Burroughs said the car tracks found in the Matt yard next to Matt's body, had an X-mark and a heart outline on the left side and a fine thread on the right side. Similar marks, he said, were found on Weinelt's truck when the police looked it over.

The State completed its case late in the afternoon. The court adjourned for dinner at 6:30 p. m. and prepared to take defense testimony later.

At 10 o'clock last night Weinelt took the stand in his own defense. In a heavily accented voice he told of his arrival in this country and of his life in Brandywine. He was not angry with Matt, he told his attorney, but he was angry with Mrs. Brodhaute. He was not even angry with Matt after the other man grabbed him by the collar and threw him on the ground, he replied to questioning.

Denies Going to Home.

A slight blush colored his heavy face when the prosecution asked him if he were in love with the woman. He denied that he was. The State produced a letter said to have been written to her by him, but it was not admitted in evidence.

He also denied that he went to the Matt home during the early evening, and said that he had made a phone call from his own home, 4 miles away, about the time of the murder.

To counter this, the State swore in Miss Louise Townsend, telephone operator at Brandywine, who testified the call was made more than an hour before the killing.

Prior to Weinelt's appearance on the stand, the defense produced a string of witnesses to testify that a truck in the neighborhood was similar to Weinelt's vehicle. J. Wilson Rollins swore that there was a similar truck in Cheltenham, and the driver of this truck testified that it was near the Matt home shortly before the murder. The State's witnesses had already told of seeing such a truck nearby.

After the State had finished its case, the jury was locked up for the night in a hotel across the street. Arguments in the case will begin this morning.

Stork Gets Credit For Farming Census

The farm population is the largest in the Nation's history, despite a migration from the farms larger than the movement to the rural sections.

The situation is due to a surplus of births over deaths, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics reported yesterday.

The bureau estimated that at the start of the year, 32,779,000 persons were living on farms in the United States, 270,000 more than the total a year previous. However, 994,000 persons had moved to the cities and only 783,000 from the cities to the farms.

However, there were 481,000 more births than deaths on the farms, which brought the rural population to an all-time high.

Writer Who Terms Self a Fiend Facing Murder Case as Firebug

Suspect Can't Recall One Fire Which Killed Woman.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 2.—A young writer, who termed himself a "fiend" and confessed to authorities he was the phantom firebug responsible for a series of incendiary fires, faces possible murder charges tonight.

Herbert Carle Peterson, 30-year-old publishing house employe and magazine author, was questioned by a psychiatrist as officials called an inquest for tomorrow in the death of Mrs. Julia Goldberg, 72, feeble widow trapped in one of the fires that spread terror through the Rogers Park district.

Detectives also released excerpts from voluminous diaries they found in the prisoner's room. Police Capt. Patrick Harding stated it was the discovery of these intimate chronicles that led the captive to give them a detailed statement of his incendiary activities.

"I am a fiend—a fiend," was an oft-repeated entry.

"I can't help my will," another set forth, "so help me, God."

"I would have no compunction against lighting a bomb and blowing the whole place literally to hell," a third, written apparently after a trip to a Loop burlesque theater, related, "if I could wipe out all sin and iniquity by so doing, I would not hesitate for an instant."

Other passages also recorded Peterson's aversion to sin, his resolutions for self-betterment.

Dr. Harry Hoffman, of the Cook County Behavior Clinic, interrogated Peterson in an effort to analyze the "peculiar mental process," which, according to Capt. Harding, influenced the youth to steal from

Check Charge Against Pulley Laid to Error

NRA Employe 'Persecuted' by New York Enemies, Says Attorney.

A series of "misunderstandings"—starting two years ago in New York—brought recent extradition proceedings against Cameron Pulley, executive secretary of the Maintenance Code Authority, NRA, it was explained yesterday by his attorney, George C. Gertman.

Pulley was arrested here several days ago on a warrant received from New York police accusing him of passing a worthless check for $250. Through the intervention of Attorney Gertman, efforts to have a $500 bond increased to $1,000 were quashed in Police Court yesterday. Judge Ralph Given, after hearing facts in the case, refused to raise the bond.

Attorney Gertman explained the "misunderstandings" to reporters:

Two years ago, Pulley was employed by a New York corporation. He became involved in three check transactions, having authority to issue and sign checks for his company. His right to issue checks was subsequently revoked, but through a mistake, Pulley was not informed.

The checks totaled $750, Gertman said he was told. Pulley was arrested and released in bond. Later he was led to believe the matter was settled. He came to Washington and entered Government service.

According to Gertman, "certain enemies" are responsible for the present charges. It was revealed in New York, he said, that one of the three checks had not been made good. It was for this that he was rearrested.

Kiwanians Hear History of Schools

Dr. Werner Addresses Club Club at Luncheon.

The history of high schools in this country was outlined yesterday by Dr. Harold E. Werner, principal of the Hine Junior High School, as a feature of the Kiwanis Club's celebration of the 300th anniversary of the founding of the first secondary school.

Frank L. Peckham, chairman of the vocational guidance committee, reported on the work of this group, which includes a weekly broadcast since January 1. Two new members were introduced by the Rev. John C. Palmer, of the educational committee. They were Joshua Evans, jr., vice president of the Hamilton National Bank, and George E. Keneipp, manager of the Washington branch of the Keystone Automobile Club.

A rising expression of appreciation was given Leroy O. King, president of William King & Son, coal merchants, now celebrating their one hundredth anniversary of business in Washington. Boxes of flowers were given to Miss Margaret Maxfield and Miss Nancy Jorss, who took part in a Kiwanis ceremony early this week.

Cement Firm Gets Writ In Fight for Blue Eagle

Applying to the District Supreme Court for an injunction to prevent the National Recovery Administration from removing its Blue Eagle, the Pennsylvania-Dixie Cement Co., of Clinchfield, Ga., yesterday obtained an order from Justice James M. Proctor requiring NRA to show cause by Monday why he should not issue a temporary restraining order.

The company, through Edmund M. Toland, asserted it had been threatened with the loss of its insignia for not reinstating an employe who was allegedly discharged because his services were no longer needed.

S. Fred Hahn, prominent shoe merchant and civic leader, who died January 27, left an estate in excess of $100,000, it was shown yesterday when a petition for the probate of his will was filed in the District Supreme Court.

The will directed that the Jewish Foster Home and the Eastern Star Home of the of the Masonic order should receive $1,000 each, while $500 is to be given the Good Hope Orphan Asylum. The residue is left to a number of relatives, friends and employes. The law firm of Tobriner, Graham, Brez & Tobriner represents the estate.

A MARVELOUS THING has happened to a wheat cereal. After years of patient experimenting with Nature's finest grain, the Kellogg Company of Battle Creek offers you a new cereal that's unlike any you ever tasted.
Flakes of toasted wheat alone do not stay crisp long enough when combined with milk or cream. But by blending, Kellogg's Wheat Krispies are given a new goodness . . . a new crispness that lasts!
Really taste the difference
Just enough rice is blended with whole wheat to give Wheat Krispies a new, appealing crunchiness. You'll notice it, the first time you try this tasty wheat cereal.
When you add milk or cream to Wheat Krispies, they always retain their crackling crispness—right down to the last spoonful.
Blending is a Kellogg achievement. Try this remarkable new product with this guarantee: "Buy a big package today, from your grocer. If you are not entirely satisfied, return the empty package, and your money will be cheerfully refunded."

School Health Survey Started By Dr. Ruhland

Extension of Medical Work Among Children Is Official's Aim.

A survey to determine to what extent District health authorities can carry out the program of medical examinations of District school children, proposed by Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, was ordered begun yesterday by Dr. George C. Ruhland, health officer.

Dr. Ruhland said he would confer today with Dr. Ballou to discuss various features of the school superintendent's program. Every effort will be made to extend the present school medical work, the health officer said. He doubted possibility of carrying out the full program within the present staff and funds of his department, he said.

Extension of the medical examination of children beyond the public school system was suggested by Dr. Ruhland. He would include pupils attending parochial and other schools.

Merely to make physical examinations and let the health work end there would not be adequate, Dr. Ruhland said. To fulfill the desired program there must be "follow-up" work among those pupils found to be not in good health. A larger staff of nurses is necessary for this work, he said.

Foreign Exchange.

By the Associated Press.

A sharp slide in silver currencies featured world foreign exchange markets. The pound sterling firmed and gold units gave ground against the dollar.

Silver metal was marked down sharply at the official posting in London, off 2⅛ pence, to 22¾ pence an ounce, on heavy Chinese selling. In New York the Hongkong dollar lost 3.10 cents at 37.25 cents and Shanghai funds were 1 cent lower at 40.50 cents. Silver futures in Montreal were 1.20 to 3 cents lower.

Pressure on the gold bloc moneys was evident. In Paris the dollar was quoted at the equivalent of 3.934 cents to the French franc, compared with an overnight rate of 4.0078 cents. In New York the franc lost .91⅛ of a cent at 6.5913 cents. The Dutch guilder declined .13 of a cent in the American market at 67.53 cents, and the Swiss franc clipped 05 of a cent at 22.37 cents.

In London the American unit lost ground at 4.84⅞ to the pound sterling, while in New York the pound was 1 cent up at 13.84¼.

Strange as It Seems —By John Hix

Strange as it seems, marks left by individual raindrops that fell during a storm 150,000,000 years ago may still be seen in rocks of that period. Identified by scientists as having been made during the Carboniferous Period, the small indentations in the rocks show that large drops of rain fell with great violence, against the sandstone slabs shown in the drawing. From the formation of the raindrop impressions scientists have also been able to determine that a gale was blowing at the time.

A bad hook followed by a perfect shot to the cup, gave J. J. Raftery an eagle on the par-4 No. 10 hole of the Miami-Biltmore Country Club course in Miami four years ago. In playing the hole Mr. Raftery played on neither the green nor the fairway. On his first shot he hooked badly, and the ball came to rest off the fairway but in a nice spot in the rough. On the second shot he used a spoon. The ball went straight to the cup on the fly, striking the flag pole and the edge of the cup, where it was found wedged in tightly two inches below the rim.

Shells of birds' eggs show a wide variation in thickness from the heavy chalky cover to the fragile thin shell. Greatest thickness was reached by the extinct Aepyornis. The kingfisher, on the other hand, lays eggs which have shells so thin that they are translucent. Shadows may readily be seen through them.

Macias to Play On River Trips Of Dance Ship

By Kay Ware.

The steamer Potomac leaves its Sixth and Water street dock tomorrow evening for the first moonlight trip of the season. Pete Macias and all the little Maciases will be on board to play sweet music for dancers; if there isn't any moon you can lounge around in steam-heated salons or gaze at the shore lights through the fog. (If there's a fog.)

Anyway, it should be a nice trip in any kind of weather. The steamer Potomac will accommodate 3,500 merrymakers, so if you want to be one of them, be on deck at 8:45 p. m. The return trip brings you back by 11:45.

On Sunday Arthur Godfrey and all the little Godfreys will furnish music for an afternoon cruise. This time the steamer chugs away at 3 p. m. to return at 6. If you are an ardent sightseer, this should be a fine opportunity to get another glimpse of historical points along the shore.

Max Lowe's Shoreham unit and Sidney's Mayflower and Heigh-Ho dittos met and battled on the Ellipse the other day. As baseball, it was a pretty good game of smart cracking. The game was tied 6 to 6 at the eleventh inning, and had to be called off for the cocktail hour. At that time the teams were not on speaking terms so it was suggested that another battle be staged next Wednesday. Casualties: "Bing" Rubin, of Heigh-Ho, was twice called called out on strikes, and Bonny the Sax, of the Shoreham, threw his batting arm out of joint. Managers are Dave Legum, bass player at the Shoreham, and Carr Van Sickler, pianist at the Mayflower. Colleague Jimmy Walter was umpire and seems to have done an honest job.

With "summer-i-cumen-in," you'll remember the Mayflower lounge's fountain, soft cool lights, and air conditioning. Not to mention mint juleps. And if you expect to travel when the heat hits us, make your plans there. Its atmosphere will put you in a new frame of mind for the Riviera — or even for Virginia Beach.

"I Won't Dance" seems to be the current hit—if you can judge by the requests Sidney gets. A potential favorite, according to Sidney's manager, Maurice Kafka, is "Life Is a Song."

Houston and Harden, the two clever youngsters at Heigh-Ho have a disarming habit of speaking in unison. You ask them, "You're really brother and sister," and they say, "We are really brother and sister," all in the same breath. It seems Elizabeth looks like father, and Danny like mother. See and hear them interpret "Who in Hell Invented Spring?" with Cole-Porterish lyrics.

Bill Strickland, whose Capitolians play at the Lotus, is complaining that he never sees his name in the paper. Bill Strickland, of the Capitolians, came down to the office to see about it. Bill Strickland probably remembers the fate of Lotus' McClusky, who, after similar complaints had his name in three or four times. (McC. and his wife just adopted a nine-day-old baby girl. He says he's now a synthetic papa.)

So, in order to make Bill Strickland happy, let it be known that Bill Strickland's Capitolians play at the Lotus Restaurant.

(Note: The fire-eater in the show is going over with a bang—particularly in the finale when the explosion comes out of his mouth. This is not an original gag.)

Shoreham show is high-lighted with Park and Clifford, the hand-balancers, who are both skillful and artistic in their well-controlled gymnastics. Ames and Revere, the dance team, are from the musical-comedy field. Mss Revere is the great-great-granddaughter of Stephen Hopkins, one of the Declaration of Independence signers. Also, she's a New York photo model.

Beatrice Lauri has been chosen the most beautiful girl in the show and presents toe and gypsy numbers. She was once a featured dancer with the Albertina Rasches.

Bamboo Room's Bill Abernethy is having a housewarming, at which John Slaughter and practically all the Willard aggregation are expected to "oh" and "ah" at the Bohemian decorations.

Remember Mrs. Ben Lindas, who sang at the Hi-Hat one afternoon? An old friend of hers read about it in this column, dropped in on the cocktail lounge just on a chance of seeing Mrs. Lindas. So there was great rejoicing when Mrs. Lilamae Teel, of Dallas, and Mrs. Lindas, of San Antonio, had an old-fashioned reunion. Best of all, Mrs. Teel was asked to sing, and sing she did very beautifully.

The Hawaiians open their sixth month with the Hi-Hat—a record for entertainers. Helping them to celebrate were former Governor of Hawaii Lawrence Judd, Delegate from Hawaii Samuel King and his daughter, Charlotte.

New show opens today at Child's Gingham Club. Headliners are Hooper and Madras, dance team, and Mary Jordan, with "exotic dance specialties." Mary Jo Hamilton, Sammy Richardson, Jimmy Santmeyer and orchestra complete the bill.

Halves of Two Dance Teams

Success story: Fifi Gills, the cigarette girl, has studied tap dancing and aspires to higher things. Her sister, who works in the check rom, say's Fifi's pretty good, so Fifi is trying to work up nerve enough to ask the manager to let her put on the show some day. Manager, consider yourself asked.

River Bend, that spot on the Mount Vernon highway that overlooks the Potomac, growing up. All the logs used in the building are hewn from trees on the estate. Host Guy S. Zepp says that his taste for rustic dwellings is due to the fact that he was born and bred in the Blue Ridge hills.

There is now dancing Wednesday and Saturday nights. Music is furnished by George Reese and his Saxons. (Also known as the Rhythm Boys of River Bend.) Cooking county style.

A new policy will inaugurate the opening of the Jockey Club Roof Garden. There will be no minimum or cover charge except on Saturday nights. In the floor show at 12:30 (Saturday) you will find Smokey and Cokey, a comedy dancing team. Music supplied by Jockey Club Orchestra.

Births Decline In Hard Times, Parley Is Told

Policy of Encouraging Families According to Means Urged.

Economic pressure and lack of security tend to lower the country's birth rate, notwithstanding evidence that families on relief are rearing the largest families, the conference on population studies in relation to social planning was told last night.

This statement was contained in the paper by Frank W. Notestein and Clyde V. Kiser, of the Milbank Memorial Fund, which was read at the dinner meeting. The three-day conference opened yesterday at the Willard Hotel.

Paradox Explained.

Although low income status is accompanied by high fertility, hard times bring a reduction in the number of births, they said, explaining the paradox as follows, in part:

"Of themselves, economic pressure and lack of security appear to be unfavorable to fertility. The case is well illustrated by the birth rates of low income groups during the depression. In spite of current misconceptions, this does not mean that the birth rates of the low income groups rose during the depression. On the contrary, they fell, as did the birth rates of all other groups in the face of increasing economic pressure."

Prof. Fairchild Speaks.

Prof. Henry P. Fairchild, of New York University, in his presidential address, described the great strides in population theory made since the Population Association of America was organized four years ago. He is retiring as its president this year.

Frederick Osborn recommended the adoption of a population policy whose aims would be to encourage large families in cases where they might be adequately provided for, discourage the rearing of large families by couples whose economic means are meager and, third, segregate persons known to be carriers of hereditary defects.

Speakers at the afternoon session were Drs. Louis I. Dublin and Alfred J. Lotka, of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., and G. St. J. Perrott. A paper prepared by Lowell J. Reed was read to the assembly.

Mrs. McClintock Heads Twentieth Century Club

Mrs. James Kent McClintock was chosen president of the Twentieth Century Club yesterday at the annual election meeting held at the Y. W. C. A. Mrs. Jane Randolph Young and Mrs. Geoffrey Creyke were elected vice presidents, Mrs. Stephen Olop and Mrs. R. Thomas West, recording and corresponding secretaries; Mrs. William Charles White, treasurer, and Mrs. Howard J. Nichols, assistant treasurer.

The new board of directors will consist of Miss Elizabeth L. Wightman, Mrs. Ernest R. McComas, Mrs. Virgil B. Jackson, Mrs. Charles Will Wight and Mrs. D. K. Shute.

New Officers Elected For Secretaries Club

George Stephan, secretary to Representative McGroarty of California, has been elected chairman of the Congressional Secretaries Club. Other officers chosen by the club's board of directors are Richard M. Long, vice president; Philip Gilsten, executive secretary; Miss Alice Disbrow, recording secretary; C. S. Gilkerson, treasurer, and Harold Hagen, sergeant-at-arms. The directors are Charles Martin, Miss B. Josephs and Dean Lake.

Car Injures Worker.

Struck by an automobile while he was working at the intersection of Fourteenth and Q streets northwest early yesterday, William Johnson, 21, an employe of the Capital Transit Co., was reported in a serious condition at Emergency Hospital last night. Johnson was painting white lines around a street car safety zone. Charles Benton Smith, 22, of Waycroft, Va., driver of the car, was charged with reckless driving.

Celluloid Glory

Hollywood, May 2.

CONSIDERING the great number of pictures which have been made, it is surprising to discover how few really great scenes remain vivid and impressive through the years. A column or two and our reels of celluloid glory have been run off. And in this unreeling there is that haunting cry of "Phalen . . . Phalen" uttered by one of the greatest actors who ever played in flickers —Emil Jannings in "The Patriot." Oddly enough, "The Patriot" was made while talking pictures were replacing the silents, and sound effects had to be dubbed in this flicker, and the few English-spoken words by Jannings was this haunting yell.

Of all the musical numbers seen on the screen, when asked quickly to name the best, the one which flashes before me immediately is that of the wheels of the train rolling across the country to the melody of "Beyond the Blue Horizon" in "Monte Carlo."

• • • •

The remembered moments of past celluloid glory can generally be credited to those people who are considered the artists in the cinema business. Again, a Charlie Chaplin flicker must be mentioned. It is "Easy Street," and Chaplin, the meek cop, has to patrol the toughest district in the town. He finally subdues the biggest tough guy by managing to poke this villain's face into the bent lamppost and turn on the gas.

Douglas Fairbanks, standing on a bridge in "The Three Musketeers," looking at the practically still stream below, and then learning in which direction it was flowing by the simple method of expectorating into it.

• • • •

GOING away back there is a memory of Betty Blythe in "The Queen of Sheba." I can't recall a scene in the flicker, but I do remember a statuesque dark beauty garbed, and not too fully, in a costume made principally of jewels. She certainly was what we boys expected a queen of Sheba to be . . . Some months ago I saw this same queen of Sheba. It was a small cellar theater, and there weren't any footlights to separate the audience from the stage, and on this stage, playing the role of a neglected wife in a bad play, stood Betty Blythe. She appeared tired and drab; entirely different from the captured piece of celluloid glory.

Another picture which I remember enjoying is Eric von Stroheim's "Greed." All I remember of it now is that long and dramatic trek across the hot desert in which one man, in his greed for gold, had handcuffed himself to another who was to die attached to him. "Greed" won for Von Stroheim the acclaim of the picture critics and the distinction of being the greatest motion picture director.

• • • •

Now Eric von Stroheim has a small office in the old writers' building at Metro, where he is under contracts as a writer. He waits to be called by supervisors. It is at this same studio that Von Stroheim strutted and held sway when he directed "The Merry Widow." He then issued orders to Mae Murry and John Gilbert, and among the extras was Joan Crawford. All this authority has been taken away from Von Stroheim, but they can never take away the fact that he directed several great pictures.

• • • •

GREAT moments.

Jackie Cooper in "Skippy," when he flung himself across the bed and prayed that his dog would be saved from the dog catcher. It was probably the greatest single bit of acting ever done by a child star . . . James Dunn crying in the doctor's office in "Bad Girl." A scene so magnificent that it took the unknown Dunn and made him a screen star suddenly . . . Lowell Sherman looking into the mirror and talking to himself in "What Price Hollywood?" He stood there face to face with his real self and made this the finest flicker ever written about the cinema town . . . The chickens on the railroad track as the "Shanghai Express" moved slowly through the small Chinese village. This scene remains more vivid than any with the glamour gal, Marlene Dietrich, although she was the star of the picture . . . And if I had to name the best performance I ever saw on the screen by an actress, I would quickly answer, Katharine Hepburn in "Morning Glory," especially that sequence in the producer's office when she is seeking a job.

• • • •

No reel of celluloid glory would be complete without at least one scene from "One Way Passage," with William Powell and Kay Francis. My special choice is that final sequence—New Year's Eve at Caliente—one bartender turns to another where, amid the gayety and noise, and asks if he heard the sound of glass breaking. And there on the bar lies two broken glasses, their stems crossed, the symbol of the two lovers who swore to spend New Year's Eve at Caliente together, although they both knew that they had to keep separate rendezvous at faraway places.

Eve's Apple Peach, Authority Thinks

Oriental Fruit Daddy of Modern Ones, Is Claim.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, May 2.—It now appears that Eve's "apple," which started the world's first family trouble, was a peach.

Such was the theory advanced today by Lloyd C. Stark, nurseryman, of Louisiana, Mo., an authority on fruit origins.

A hairy, inedibile peach, which grows wild at elevations of 7,000 feet in Tibet and China is the daddy of all modern peaches, Stark said. The modern fruit was developed and carried through commerce into Chinese, Roman, Greek and Persian civilizations.

"In more ancient days," said the nurseryman, "the Chinese believed eating a certain kind of peach would bring immortality and preserve the body from corruption to the end of the world. The peach tree was the 'tree of knowledge' to the Chinese, and it may have been that the apple, eaten by Eve in the Garden of Eden, after all, was the Persian apple, or, as it is known today, a peach."

Million $$$ Blunders

New York, May 2.

Irving Thalberg, then with Universal, fired Norma Shearer because she asked for $100-a-week (at M.-G.-M., he married her) . . . Fox failed to renew Rudy Vallee's contract, and his first Warner picture will net the company $500,000 . . . Universal thumbed out Miss Shearer, Colleen Moore, Janet Gaynor and Bette Davis . . . Paramount rejected Katharine Hepburn, Gladys George; ousted Wally Beery . . . Warner's tied the can to Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, Ginger Rogers . . . RKO executives, after seeing Katharine Hepburn, tore out their hair in anguish (had it not been for Director George Cukor, who insisted on casting her in "Bill of Divorcement," RKO would have lost their biggest moneymaker) . . . M.-G.-M. had first crack at Fred Astaire, Nelson Eddy, Grace Moore, Joel McCrea, Ann Dvorak, Charles Boyer, Lew Ayres . . . and the masterminds turned all of them loose . . . The William Morris office peddled Mae West to every company until Paramount finally took a chance, and Frances Marion peddled Marie Dressler to every studio until M.-G.-M. took her as a favor!

• • • •

When Buddy De Sylva, Lew Brown and Ray Henderson wrote "Sonny Boy," they were so ashamed of the maudlin sentiment of the lyric that they refused to let Bobby Crawford put their names on the cover of it ("Sonny Boy," of which they were ashamed, sold 2,000,000 copies) . . . "Two Cigarettes in the Dark," one of Tin Pan Alley's biggest hits in recent seasons, was repected by every music publisher . . . "The Last Round-Up," owned by Shapiro-Bernstein for years, was considered a hopeless flop, until George Olsen heard it and told Joe Morrison to sing it with the band (the flop song sold 800,000 copies) . . . Jack Mills bought eight songs from Gordon and Revel seasons ago and rejected the ninth (the one rejected was "Underneath the Harlem Moon") . . . M.-G.-M. ordered Rogers and Hart to take "Blue Moon" out of a recent flicker, on the ground it was trash (it is the biggest seller in the last six months).

Million Dollar Boners? The Morro Castle disaster! . . . The New York Giants forgot to pick up the option on Hack Wilson, and a few seasons later, he mortified 'em by topping the National League hitters . . . John the Barber had the original contract on Jack Dempsey, but let him go after John Lester Johnson broke three of Dempsey's ribs . . . Elmer Rice's "Street Scene" was rejected by every Broadway producer for two years until William A. Brady decided to take a chance on it (the play made $2,000,000) . . . Ann Nichols would have sold 50 per cent of "Abie's Irish Rose" for $2,500, but couldn't even raise $1,000 (it was one of the most terrific money makers) . . . "Sailor Beware," smash hit of last season, went begging for backers. Courtney Burr couldn't raise $3,500 on it (it made hundreds of thousands in profits).

George White told Kate Smith's manager that she was crazy to turn down $275 a week (she celebrated her fourth radio anniversary this week with $1,000,000 in the bank) . . . Flo Ziegfeld thought that Gordon and Revel, smash hit tune writers of today, were rank amateurs . . . George M. Cohan rejected Fanny Brice for one of his shows because he thought she walked peculiarly . . . Cohan turned down Burns, of Burns and Allen, when Burns tried to get a job as a hoofer . . . I begged Harry Cohn, of Columbia Pictures, to sign Katharine Hepburn, Margaret Sullavan and Aline MacMahon, but the scout he sent to the theaters said they wouldn't photograph well (well, they found out, huh?).

"Within the Law," was sold by William A. Brady for $10,000 (with Jane Cowl playing the lead, it made $2,000,000, because the stage murder got all the page 1 benefit of the shooting of Herman Rosenthal by Gyp the Blood and Lefty Louie et al, a parallel case) . . . Al Smith, greatest of public speakers because he had an uncanny sense of "timing" his remarks, committed a Million Dollar Blunder by writing for a monthly magazine (he had to prepare his articles 30 days ahead, and his first big attack on Roosevelt hit the stands the day after Roosevelt had made an amazing radio speech. But Smith couldn't recall the printed magazines) . . . Hitler's pogroms against the Jews, resulting in the deadliest of economic weapons, the boycott . . . Prohibition! . . . Lew Fields discharged Fredric March because he was too clumsy on a stage . . . Rodolf Valentino was fired after dancing one show at the Colony Theater.

"Three Men on a Horse," smash hit of 1935, couldn't get a backer . . . "Trial of Mary Dugan," another smash, was around, unwanted, for seasons (and it had a fair actress in it, Ann Harding) . . . Sam Goldwyn bought off Robert Montgomery's contract after seeing the first day's rushes of his purchase . . . Race track experts, ridiculed Black Gold, but the little Indian thoroughbred won the Kentucky Derby . . . Jeanne Eagels tried for three years to persuade a producer to stage "Rain," which made millions . . . "Shanghai Gesture" was voted a flop after breaking in at Atlantic City . . . Million Dollar Blunders? I'll tell you some more of them next week!

Virginia Cup Race Lures D. C. Society

Grand National Inaugural Also Shares Interest With Derby.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Many of those who have not gone to the Derby at Churchill Downs, Ky., will take themselves to Warrenton, Va., tomorrow, if the weather is fine, to see the traditional Virginia Gold Cup race, to be run on the new course at the Broadview estate of Mr. and Mrs. Alex B. Hagner. This is the course on which the race first was run in 1922, and the recent improvement will contribute largely to making a run over a 4-mile, stiff timber course most interesting. The Virginia Grand National, a new race over the difficult brush course, will draw a larger field and steal some of the spotlight from the Gold Cup race, but both will be enjoyable to those who make the trip to Warrenton.

Many parties have been planned for the week-end on the various estates in the vicinity of the course, a region known for its beauty. Still others will gather at the famous North Wales Club for the subscription dance to be held tomorrow evening.

Picnic at Viewtree.

Viewtree, the estate of Mr. Oscar T. Crosby, which has been occupied during the winter by Col. Henry Armstead, will be the scene of a gay picnic luncheon party before the races. Mrs. Celeste Crosby Miller, daughter of Mr. Crosby, who had been making her home at the Fairfax this winter, has opened the house, and has put everything in readiness for the large party which will picnic on the broad terrace directly overlooking the race course.

Everybody is taking his own picnic basket and the party will be a jolly one, though, as Mrs. Miller says, there will be no hostess, for she is interested in the race and refuses to spend the afternoon playing hostess to those who prefer the terrace of Viewtree to the race course.

Mr. Crosby in Europe.

Mr. Crosby, who has been in Europe several months, will arrive in England early next week from Italy, where he has been visiting his daughter, the Countess Caracciolo de Melito, in Naples. Mr. Crosby will remain abroad until early next month, when he plans to join Mrs. Miller here. They will reopen Viewtree for the season later in the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Hagner will entertain a large group of friends from Washington at Broadview for luncheon, and later in the day will have guests for dinner before the dance at North Wales. Mr. and Mrs. J. Chauncey Williams will entertain at Rock Hill, Casanova, and Mrs. J. H. Dorst will have guests for the race.

Among the guests at North Wales will be Mr. and Mrs. Frank M. Gould, Mr. and Mrs. John F. Walker, Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Walker, Mr. and Mrs. William Brainard, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Dickson, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Pryibil, Mr. and Mrs. Tristam Colkert, Mr. and Mrs. V. S. Makaroff, Mr. Frederick H. Prince, Mr. Cyril Harrison, Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Hooes, Mr. J. D. Inglehart, Mr. and Mrs. Dean Atcheson and Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Truesdale.

Women Plan Benefit Tea

Mrs. Greenlee, Mrs. Gillette Leaders in Fete Aiding West Point Chapel.

Among the many women taking part in promoting the card party and tea at the Army and Navy Country Club at 2 o'clock on Monday afternoon, for the benefit of the fund for improvements to the Catholic chapel at West Point, are Mrs. H. R. Greenlee, chairman of committees, and Mrs. N. C. Gillette.

Other members of the various committees working for the success of the entertainment are Mrs. C. D. Hartman, Mrs. H. H. Slaughter, Mrs. Frank Slingluff, Mrs. H. M. Estes, Mrs. E. A. Lynn, Mrs. P. N. L. Bellinger, Mrs. Howard Benson, Mrs. C. M. O'Brien, Mrs. H. M. O'Brien, Mrs. G. Ordway, Mrs. Hugh Gallagher, Mrs. George Rothkopf, Mrs. Frank Allen, Mrs. J. L. Johnson, Mrs. Frank Hamilton and Mrs. John E. Woodward, Miss Margaret Loughran, Miss Mary L. Gallagher, Miss Agnes Fealy, Miss Helen O'Connor, Miss Nancy Woodward, Miss Nancy Ordway, Miss Babs Bonnycastle, Miss Meda Saunders, Miss Helen Walker and Miss Evelyn Walker.

Mrs. Roosevelt Guest At League's Dinner

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt attended a dinner last night in honor of Miss Jane Addams by the Women's International League. The dinner marked the twentieth anniversary of the league.

Mrs. Roosevelt was among those at the "rummage" sale of the Army and Navy League yesterday afternoon. Later she received members of the Women's International League.

Simple Remedy For Tired Eyes Is on Market

By Ruth Anne Davis.

NO WOMAN is ever really homely if she has lovely eyes. And, thanks to the progress of modern science, it is within reach of us all to beautify our eyes to a great extent. With a little care their charm can not only be preserved indefinitely, but can be greatly enhanced.

A certain beauty house offers substantial aid in making the eyes our loveliest feature. How? By an ever-so-simple treatment! First of all use an eye bath made of chemically pure and safe ingredients dissolved in distilled water. This is just as effective applied over the eyes on a cotton pad, as used with an eye cup. When you are tired, and the strain of the day shows in your red and dull eyes, just try a little of it and you'll be delighted with the difference it makes. Your eyes lose their tired look and become bright, rested and glamorous.

The next step centers around an eye wrinkle cream, a rich, soothing preparation which helps you drive away the tiny crow's-feet around the eyes. Take a pinch of the cream on your finger, smooth it over the crepey lids and around the corners of the eyes. Allow it to remain for 20 or 30 minutes, and then remove with a tissue. If you use it at night before retiring allow a thin coating to remain on. Consistent use will prove to you that crow's-feet aren't half as stubborn about remaining as you might have fancied.

If you are on the under side of 30 you might not need the wrinkle cream, but the eye bath—that's a different matter. That will enable you to bring out the rare beauty of your eyes and keep them fresh and lovely looking, even when you're most fatigued.

Attractive Desk Sets.

Foremost among the housewife's worries is how to give her home a spring touch at the least possible expense. One good place to begin is the desk. In the stationary department of a local store she may buy attractive sets including desk pad, wastepaper basket, letter file, or holder, and a scrapbook, covered with green and white, or brown and white striped paper. Along with this ensemble comes a quaint, cylindrical-shaped knitting box, filled to the brim with stationary.

Don't think for a moment these sets aren't practical for, although they are light in color, they clean easily with artgum.

For Cleaning Accessories.

Just as flowers are beginning to appear in greater profusion, and spring hats on every head, so are white gloves and white bags increasing steadily in number. The important point is to keep these smart accessories as clean and white as the day they were bought. You know, just ordinary scrubbing won't do it. And probably you've been disappointed in many preparations you've bought for the purpose.

You'll be far from disappointed if you try a certain new cleanser especially recommended for white gloves, and handbags, as well as fancy colored ones. It comes in the form of a colorless wax-like substance. You take a dab of this on a cloth, rub it over the bag, your gloves, or shoes, and you'll see that you literally rub the soil away. And as it cleans, it polishes. You'll find that your accessories will retain their brand-new gloss as long as you use this excellent cleanser. It costs only 25 cents.

Bargain in French Powder.

Here's a real bargain. A certain French cosmetic company found its products sold so well in this country they started a concern here. This has proven so successful that they are going to discontinue their importations. The products which have already been sent over for sale here have been lowered in price—drastically lowered. A shining example lies in this French powder displayed in a downtown store. Only a few weeks ago it sold for $1 a box. Now it is 25 cents. You'll be delighted with its soft, fine texture, and the lovely shades in which it comes. No one among them that wasn't perfected to add its own bit of ivory, tint or magnolia bloom to your skin.

New Wardrobe Duplex.

One thing every family can use is the new closet duplex. It consists of two compartments roomy enough to hold your complete wardrobe.

Dry Cereals Require Some Retouching To Be Acceptable Through the Summer

There is nothing exactly new about these retouched breakfast cereals, but they have a way of attracting the most finicky appetites at this season of the year. Fresh strawberries, fresh or canned peaches, stewed fruits or sliced bananas will do the trick.

Sample Menus for Meals During the Week-End Suggested.

By Dorothea Duncan.

HERE IS a five-day cure for breakfast ills. Hot cereals are out, at least for the warm months and dry cereals should be back in favor, but they need a bit of retouching to hold sway all summer.

Start out on Sunday with cornflakes smothered with fresh strawberries and cream. Next day cover the breakfast prunes with a sprinkling of dry cereal and plenty of top milk. Follow this up at the next breakfast with dry cereal topped with chilled canned peach slices. The fourth day in the series will bring a sliced bananas and bran combination. Now you have won the family over, so the last day try the favorite cereal with sugar and cream. This will give the members of your family an opportunity to cry lustily for their favorite fruit and cereal combination.

Meat Balls With Tomato and Mushroom Sauce.

2 pounds round steak, or half pork or veal, ground
½ cup cracker crumbs
2 eggs, beaten
2 teaspoons salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
1 bay leaf
1 tablespoon chopped onion

Combine ingredients thoroughly and shape into balls the size of an egg. Roll in flour and brown in frying pan. Place in casserole and pour over the following:

2 cups strained tomato juice
1 small onion, chopped
2 tablespoons butter
¼ pound mushrooms, chopped fine

Melt butter in frying pan, add chopped onions, and brown. Strain this and add tomato juice and mushrooms.

Stuffed Beet Salad.

8 large cooked beets
2-3 cup diced celery
½ cup cottage cheese
2 tablespoons chopped green pepper
2 tablespoons finely chopped onion
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
2-3 cup salad dressing

Scrub beets two and one-half inches in diameter. Cover by five inches with water. Boil gently until beets are tender when tested with a fork. This will require about 50 minutes of cooking. Drain beets, cover with cold water and let stand five minutes. Remove skins and chill beets. Using sharp knife, cut out portions of beets until little cases are formed. Handle these carefully as they break easily. The center portion of the beets may be stored in the refrigerator and used next day with cabbage for a different salad.

Mix three tablespoons of dressing with the rest of the ingredients which have been thoroughly chilled and fill beet cases. Arrange on lettuce and top with the remaining dressing. Serve immediately.

Pattern in Just Eight Pieces Provides Smart Afternoon Gown

Pattern No. 848.

THIS AFTERNOON gown is a smart and easily made addition to the wardrobe of any young girl or matron. The skirt, cut to flatter almost any hip line, has simple seams which present little of a sewing problem. The short kimono sleeves, slit for comfort, do away with the work of fitting sleeves.

Clips hold the lovely draped collar at the shoulders. You might have two pair of these and use them to determine the formallity of the gown. One pair could be of wood or composition for casual daytime wear, the other of silver or gold metal for more formal occasions. There are just eight pieces in this pattern, which is designed for sizes 14 to 42. Size 18 (36B) requires 4⅛ yards of 39-inch material for the frock, with belt included.

The GAME of LIFE

By Priscilla Wayne

After winning a sectional tennis tournament, Ellen Mallory is eager to enter the approaching national tournament. But Michael Dale reminds her of her promise to marry him immediately and give up tennis. Further, he asserts, a girl can't divide her time between a career and a home without the home suffering. For the first time they quarrel.

Though Ellen realizes that her mother has never approved of Mike, she is stunned to learn that Mrs. Mallory has intercepted a phone call and a letter from him the day after their quarrel. Ellen announces that she will marry Mike right away. Then her mother confesses that she owes $2,700 in various bills and that if Ellen no longer works at the real estate office the debts can not be paid. Ellen heroically arranges to pay $20 a month in an effort to save the family from disgrace.

Mike meets her the following Saturday noon and whisks her away to Bethany, Mo., on the pretext of seeing some friends, Clarence and Lou Gray

Now go on with the story:

"MUSTARD on your sandwich?" Mike asked tenderly and they laughed like young idiots because he smeared his own hand with mustard, when he tried to get rid of the spreading knife fast enough so that he could kiss her before she took a bit of the sandwich.

The priprietor of Sandy's sandwich Shack nudged his frowsy-haired wife at sight of this poorly concealed love making. "Pipe the young ones, Sadie," he whispered. "You'n me used to do some classy lovemakin', too, Hon."

They rode away through the sunshine of the afternoon.

"You're pretty as an angel today," Mike told her quite truthfully. "All my life I want to remember you just as you look this minute," and he almost ran off the road getting a voracious eyeful.

"You're not," she ventured shyly, "so very hard to look at yourself."

Everything Arranged.

He wanted to feel her slim, soft young body close in his arms—but he knew that an interesting and interested group awaited him in Bethany.

They were entering the placid little Missouri city now.

Ellen glanced at her wrist watch. "I hope your friend isn't impatient. It's just two."

Mike laughed in great glee. "He won't be. He'd wait even longer than this."

They were stopping in front of the courthouse. "We'll park here," Mike said and Ellen noticed that his voice trembled ever so slightly.

She turned to him wonderingly. "Why, Mike, what's wrong?"

"We're going to be married here, sweetheart," Mike told her, his face white in his anxiety for her approval. "Clarence and Lou will be waiting for us inside. Oh, forgive me, dear. It was the only way I could be sure of you. I made up my mind—after that quarrel, that once I got you again I'd never let you out of my sight."

Sometimes, in the hectic weeks that followed this mad afternoon, Ellen wondered how she could have let herself be so unfair to Mike.

To be sure, she had tried to tell him, clutching at him with small, insistent hands in a futile attempt to make him listen, "Mike, I can't marry you. I can't."

"Honey, if it's because you want a wedding—with flowers and attendants and all, I'll make it up to you somehow. But I can't risk letting you out of my sight. I can't take the chance of letting you go home again.

Oh, there was no chance standing up against his determined arguments. "Besides, we're both of age. I can take care of you. Just give me the chance to prove to you that I can, Ellen."

"But we quarreled, Mike—you haven't given in. I haven't given in. What are we going to do, afterward?"

"I don't know," frankly. "We'll just settle that when the time comes. Right now you're going to be Mrs. Michael Dale."

But Ellen made still another effort "Mike, I'm in debt. I've obligations. I owe some money. I couldn't let you——"

And right there in front of the courthouse, nestling in the square of the city of Bethany, Michael effectively silenced that argument with a kiss. "Hush, dear. Here they come, Clarence and Lou. Good friends—to come when I telephoned them."

Lou had bought roses. She confided that fact to Ellen as they waited while the clerk of the courts made out the necessary documents.

There was scarcely a second to think before their cars were drawing up before the white painted manse.

As long as she lived, Ellen was to remember the quiet beauty of that scene. A soft, fragrantly scented breeze gently rustled the white curtains at the window. A great bowl of roses on the center table shed beauty on the scene.

Mike seemed very tall and grave as he stood, his arm about Ellen, while the minister read the slow, solemn words that made them man and wife.

Mike said, "I do," so firmly that the sound of it rocked the silence in the quiet room. And then he was reaching in his pocket to pull out a tiny golden circlet—how in the world had he remembered that?—and putting it on Ellen's ring finger prayerfully to stay right there as long as the two of them should live.

The minister prayed—sincerely, reverently.

A soft "amen" ended his gentle benediction.

They had a merry wedding dinner at the hotel.

"I'm going right now," Lou said, with her usual thoughtfulness, "and wire your mother. What shall I say?"

Realization struck icy fingers into Ellen's heart. "Just say I'm with you," she faltered. "Don't tell her about—about the wedding. I'll tell her when I see her."

"And tell her you'll be home when?"

"Tell her," Mike supplemented firmly, "that Mr. and Mrs. Michael Dale will be home tomorrow night. And that we'll call on her. You're coming home with me tomorrow night, Mrs. Dale—to our own home.

"I telephoned the last minute before I met you this noon. They're sending some things over from the furniture store—you can exchange 'em later if you don't like 'em—and we'll just camp there—in our own home. Won't it be gorgeous?"

Lou asked them to come out to their place for over Sunday. "But I'll not insist," she added with a grin. "Clarence and I know what it is to be surrounded knee deep on a honeymoon. His mother came to live with us the second day after the wedding, just after we'd got home."

"She's a dear old lady, of course," Lou went on generously. "And we're glad to have her because she hasn't any other place to go. But really, it's just too bad if young people have to live with their in-laws or their in-laws have to live with them. We know, don't we, Clarence?"

"I'm afraid we do," Clarence said moodily, and the glance he turned on his young wife was not altogether devoted.

Ellen noticed with dismay. So already Clarence and Lou had come to the "in-law" problem. Even across her ecstatic happiness thought her own mother's disapproval of her marriage lay like a shadow.

But she forgot it when she was off alone in the car with Mike.

"We're going to St. Joe, darlin', and we're not going to worry. Don't think I can't tell what you're thinkabout, Ellen. We're going to have plenty arguments when we get back to Fairhaven. But we've got 24 hours, you and I, in paradise, and we aren't going to worry, we aren't going to think about anything but each other."

Soft, cool shadows of the dusk lay over the world as they registered at the hotel. With a fine flourish, trying to pretend that he'd he'd done it dozens of times before, Michael wrote across the ledger, "Mr. and Mrs Michael Dale and wife."

The hotel clerk laughed and Michael reddened to the roots of his hair as he hastily drew the pen through that "and wife."

Ellen did not laugh until the door of their room was safely closed and locked against the bellboy who brought their lone bag—which contained nothing more than Mike's agency papers—and then brought ice water for good measure.

It was a shaky laugh, compounded of happiness and anxiety. . . . Mike silenced it with a kiss.

"Newspaper photographers," a Cub Reporter once sighed enviously, "are the luckiest men on a news staff. They can never be accused of misquoting somebody."

But any newspaper photographer will sneer politely at that remark. "Huh," they will grunt, "any reporter can write a story about a news-event after it has happened. But we photographers must be there while it's still happening, if the desk wants a picture!"

And in order to get those pictures, a news photographer must be a rare combination of sprinter, pugilist, artist, diplomat and fortune teller. He must be as fast on the trigger as Wild Bill Hickok and as patient as Job. He never knows whether his next assignment will be to get a picture of raging flood waters, a shot from the top of the Washington Monument scaffolding or a photograph of Senator Weidebottom, who has sponsored a bill to equip all banks with counterfeit money so bandits can't steal anything of value. And he is firmly convinced that only two kinds of people exist: those who are eternally trying to get their pictures into the papers and those who are trying just as hard to keep them out.

Each morning, in The Washington Post, staff photographers bring you the pictorial highlights of the day's news, and their photographs enable you to grasp a clearer understanding of the event, whether it be a campaign to rattle tin cans at starlings or a munitions inquiry, or the winning touchdown in a football game. A picture, Confucius said, is worth 10,000 words. Post photographers, with years of experience in catching the news record on their sensitized plates, bring you pictures worth 20,000 words.

Hugh Miller, chief Post photographer, is nationally known for his marvelous "action" photographs and scenes of horse races, and during his career has photographed thousands of thrilling scenes. But his photographic genius is not limited to "action" photographs, and when he went out recently for a storm picture, he brought back a scene so beautiful that popular demand forced us to publish it again in the rotogravure section. Hugh is ably assisted by Louis Johrden, Harry Goodwin, John Mills, jr., Arthur Ellis, Harold Dowling, William Stoddard and Byron Rollins. Each day these men comb the city for interesting photographs of the news, and after they get their pictures, they retire to their dark rooms and await developments. These developments, in the form of interesting, intelligent, understandable photographs, come to you each day in

Clear-Headed Thinking Needed If Women Expect to Advance The Cause of World Peace

By Malvina Lindsay.

WHAT CAN WOMEN do to stop war? Anything? Or nothing?

On the surface the answer seems discouraging. Twenty years ago the Women's International Committee set out on a valiant peace adventure. Yet two years later women of America were swept as madly as men into the hysteria of war.

• • • • •

Now as the dauntless little peace group of 1915 is holding its reunion in Washington the threatening rumble of cannon again resounds around the world. The average woman, terror stricken in heart, thinks, "Is there any one thing that I personally can do to avert this madness?"

• • • • •

It seems futile at this critical stage of affairs to argue the long range effects of peace movements, to show how the gradual and persistent activities of the Women's International Committee and the more recently organized National Committee for the Cause and Cure of War have set in motion forces that may ultimately lead to a warless world. Is seems futile to point out that all great advances come slowly, that even the signing of the Magna Charta at Runnymede was not the fruit of 20 years but of centuries. It seems futile even to cite Carrie Chapman Catt's profound epigram "Democracy is the only antidote to war," and to tell women to go out and work for economic and political democracy.

FOR THE AVERAGE woman wants to do something concrete and she wants to do it quickly. She wants to do something to stop not the next after the next but the next war—the war that will rob her of her husband and sons, the war from whose aftermath of depression and poverty she will suffer personally.

What then can she do? That is a matter entirely up to herself. It depends on her own mental initiative and courage. Undoubtedly her first step is to dedicate her mind and her heart to the task.

• • • • •

It seems incredible that in the nearly 16 years that have elapsed since the Armistice, women—temperamentally lovers of peace that they are—have not passionately devoted all of their time and energy to averating a repetition of 1914. It seems especially unbelievable that club women should have gone on obsessed with their petty concerns of elections, banquets, book reviews and foreign lecturers when such a colossal movement as world peace challenged them.

• • • • •

If, in the last 16 years, they had brought to that the crusading fire that their forerunners brought to abolition, temperance, suffrage, foreign missions, it is possible that they would have ignited a peace movement among the women of the world that might now quench the sparks of the threatened European holocaust.

THE GREATEST long run service that any woman can make to the cause of peace is to work for international cooperation of her sex against war. But the most immediate and most concrete contribution she can make is to keep her head. With propagandists, demagogues, and jingoists howling on all sides it is easier to accept slick shibboleths than to think for one's self. It is easier to accept the judgment of a political leader, an omniscient-voiced newsreel orator, a friend, or a husband than to study, investigate and form one's own conclusions. It is easier to let emotion rather than reason dictate one's convictions.

• • • • •

The American woman faces a particular challenge for clear-headedness, for freedom from mob-mindedness at this time because of her power in her household—a power that caused Dr. H. S. Simon, German consul general at Chicago to write of her recently in the Berliner Tageblatt as one who "completely dominates her home surroundings, who presides at the head of the table, conducts the conversation and feels herself responsible for it."

• • • • •

However much this picture may be exaggerated, her influence on men's emotional thinking can not be denied. The popular songs of the late war, if they did nothing else, proved that. In the critical period ahead the American woman's supreme duty is to inform herself, think for herself and if necessary stand by herself—even in the face of mob hysteria.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

FROM MAIL which has accumulated on this desk as a result of the saleswoman versus woman shopper controversy launched two weeks ago, I am today selecting two letters to be presented in what I hope will be the final hearing in the debate.

• • • • •

One of them is radically different from the flow of letters which has characterized this discussion, in that it presents for the first time a woman shopper speaking out definitely in defense of the saleswoman. Perhaps this document will serve to appease "Jaundiced," the saleswoman whose cynical missive started it all; and give pause to outraged shoppers who have denied her allegations on the charge they were without foundation in fact. M. H.

Appeal to Shoppers.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: The many letters discussing the saleswoman-shopper situation have been most interesting and I particularly want to commend "Store Member (W. & L.)," whose letter was published Saturday.

Many years ago I was a saleslady in one of our large local department stores and not for anything would I trade my experience. It was at the age of 17 that I started to work; at a time when more home-dressmakers were employed. Being in a department that required patient planning with the inexperienced seamstress, I learned that while the saleslady must exercise gracious consideration, the same must also apply to the customer.

• • • • •

In my day most girls went into a department store because office jobs were few and business training was necesary. For that reason salesgirls were considered not highly educated and customers of newly acquired wealth or position often looked down upon them. On the other hand, those accustomed to gracious living were entirely considerate.

• • • • •

Nowadays, department store heads are requiring college girls; those who have associated with persons of wealth and position and who go into store work because the depression has made it necessary and no better openings beckon. These girls may not like store life; their ambitions may be for other things and for that reason they may have brought a completely cooperative attitude to the job. Although they must work, they may resent having to be—as perhaps they regard it—"a servant to the wealthy," completely overlooking the fact that a majority of their customers are employed persons like themselves who must do their shopping in department stores.

• • • • •

Personally, I would advocate every girl rounding out her education with at least two years behind the counter of some department store. I have a daughter, a college girl, employed in what is considered our best department store. She doesn't particularly like the work, yet I notice she is acquiring an improved technique in meeting persons and is genuinely gratified by a gracious customer. I am sure her experience is going to be very beneficial to her future.

• • • • •

In closing, may I make an appeal to customers to give every consideration to the girl behind the counter, remembering that she may have had a very trying customer just previous and that your kindness may help her regain her composure? Very truly, G. M. D.

• • • • •

Boost for Saleswomen.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Regarding the deportment of saleswomen in Washington stores, I wish to say that out of my many years' shopping experience in most of the large cities of the United States I have found the finest and most painstaking saleswomen in Washington.

They are well-trained in their profession, often well educated; many are college graduates or debutantes whose parents have placed them in department stores to learn how to meet the public in a sensible way. Inevitably one meets with an occasional snobbish or careless saleswoman, but one can rest assured she won't hold her job long. Saleswomen in the larger and better stores work on salary plus commission, which is a commendable arrangement since it puts a premium on effort. Little do they care whether the woman they sell to is dressed in silks or cottons.

• • • • •

Now, a word about the Washington shoppers: They are among the hardest to please. Often they do not appreciate the effort put forth by the saleswomen to help them. They are a leisure class and, in my opinion, they kill more time just running into and out of stores trying on things and "just looking" than shoppers anywhere else in the United States.

• • • • •

Here is just a sample of the conduct peculiar to Washington shoppers: I shopped with a friend one morning not long ago. We went into six big stores. She tried on many dresses and strutted around but bought nothing. Then we walked into one of the largest stores in the city—on F street.

She looked at gloves, hosiery and perfumes. Then she said "Let's go to the dress department." A very polite saleswoman stepped up to us and asked, "What may I show you?" She seated us in a lovely private sitting room and at once brought in the kind of dress my friend had asked for. It fitted perfectly. Now, to make a long story short, my friend had the nerve to try on 18 dresses, many of which fitted her perfectly, the saleswoman's energy never once flagging.

• • • • •

I felt so sorry for the saleswoman, for she did give my friend such royal service. Then my friend said: "I don't believe I'll buy a dress today. Let's have lunch!"

• • • • •

Washington's leisure class has no appreciation of fine sales service. If I were among the saleswomen of this city I'd sure cross my fingers on this type of customer and I'd give her scant but polite service. Many fine saleswomen have lost out just because of such women reporting them to higher authorities, who swallowed the catty charges made and let the saleswomen go.

This leisure class has nothing else much to do but run the streets. The above are true facts and I hope your paper will have the courage to publish them. Thanking you, I am, A SHOPPER.

What Today Means

"Taurus."

IF MAY 3 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 11:10 a. m. to 1:10 p. m., from 3:10 to 5:10 p. m., and from 8:10 to 10:10 p. m. The danger periods are from 9:10 to 11:10 a. m., from 5:10 to 7:10 p. m. and from 10:10 p. m. until midnight.

It will pay to be frank and aboveboard today in all your dealings, as any form of insincerity probably will be uncovered. Any lack of a willingness to cooperate either in domestic or office matters, if you are requested to, will be a mistake and might cause trouble to brew.

If a woman and May 3 is your birthday, do not dwell today on any unpleasant thoughts of the past, but think optimistic ones regarding the future. Today may give you some form of encouragement which will make you feel justified in the building up of beautiful air castles.

Your family and friends may have good cause to think you are entirely too uncommunicative when it comes to things of a personal nature. For your own good endeavor to overcome any inclination to be too reticent to discuss your problems with those who are interested in your future. You may find interior decorating, painting, writing, music, singing or dramatic work both fascinating, as well as profitable.

The child born on May 3 usually as soon as it merges from infancy into youth displays the possession of a splendid mentality and an inclination to be rather reserved.

If a man and May 3 is your natal day, do not make the mistake of trying to hide a kind heart, as well as generous impluses, behind a mask of taciturnity. Chemistry, theology, mineralogy, as well as industrial sales engineering, offer vocational opportunities which are likely to be highly remunerative should you engage in any one of them.

Authority on Plebiscites Here for Annual Visit

This is Sarah Wambaugh, technical boss of the recent plebiscite in the Saar Basin. Miss Wambaugh, whose home is in Cambridge, Mass., is now in Washington visiting Mrs. Anne Archbold.

Sarah Wambaugh, Who Directed Saar Election, Plans to Return There in Summer to Gather Material for New Book.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

THE PERSON who probably knows more than anybody else about plebiscites—Sarah Wambaugh, of Cambridge, Mass.—is paying her annual visit to Washington. Every year Miss Wambaugh is in America she comes to the Capital for three things: to see her longtime friend, Mrs. Anne Archbold; to attend the meeting of the section of camparative and international law of the American Bar Association; and to call upon her oculist.

Since her last trip Miss Wambaugh has served as technical boss of one of the most complicated political problems with which Europe has had to contend since the war, the self-determination of the Saar Basin's inhabitants.

Yesterday she sat in the inclosed sun terrace of Mrs. Archbold's home, 3905 Reservoir road, and recalled those turbulent days preceding the Saar plebiscite; the days far more turbulent for the voters than for herself, she admitted.

Neutrality Respected.

It was her job, among other things, to remain strictly neutral. And, rather to her surprise, this neutrality was respected. She declares she was not annoyed by persons trying to find out how she thought the voting would go. Even the little army of newspapermen stationed in the Basin refrained from asking her the probable results of the plebiscite. There was one false interview published, however; an interview which quoted Miss Wambaugh as saying the decision would be in favor of Germany. But evidently this didn't worry her much. She can't even remember which news service printed it.

Soon after the voting she left the Saar; so soon, in fact, she had no time to observe the reaction of the people. But she plans to return next summer so she can get more material for the book she is writing about the Saar's "self-determination."

This will be Miss Wambaugh's third book. The two former ones also dealt with plebiscites.

Long before she went to the Saar she traveled to South America at the request of Peru to act as adviser for a proposed plebiscite in the region known as Tacna-Arica, wanted by both Peru and Chile.

"It was a failure," Miss Wambaugh said. "But it was valuable experience because it taught us what not to do in the Saar. It showed us a plebiscite can not be held until the territory has been neutralized."

And that's the reason, according to Miss Wambaugh, why a plebiscite is impossible as far as the Polish Corridor or Manchukuo is concerned. In fact there are no plebiscites in the offing to her knowledge.

Political questions have always interested Miss Wambaugh. She was executive secretary of the Massachusetts branch of the Woman's Peace Party when she wrote her first book. Before its publication there was no compilation of information on how to run a plebiscite. This volume had a good deal to do with Miss Wambaugh's becoming a technical expert in the secretariat of the League of Nations.

Young Film Fans Prefer Romance And Adventure

War and educational films have little appeal to children. Boys, as a rule, like adventure films, but girls prefer romances.

This insight into children's movie tastes has been obtained through a survey conducted in eleven countries by the League of Nations child welfare committee.

The order of film preference with boys, according to the survey, is Westerns, adventure, comedies, mysteries with war films, romances, tragedies and educational movies at the end of the list. The order of girls' preference is romances, comedies, Westerns, tragedies, and ends with sports, adventure, educational and war films.

Below Minimum Requirements.

It is permissible to open the bidding with hands containing slightly below the minimum requirements when you are 60 on score.

On the deal below North and South, by aggressive bidding, reached a game contract with their part-score, but it was no easy task for declarer to fulfill the contract.

North, Dealer.

The bidding: (Figure after bid refers to numbered explanatory paragraph.)

North	East	South	West
1♣(1)	1◇	1♠	2♡
Pass	Pass	2♠	Pass
Pass	3♡	3♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

The Play.

West opened the diamond ten, which held the trick. A diamond was continued. East winning with the nine-spot, and returning the Jack.

South had his choice of plays at this point. He could discard a losing club, permitting West to ruff the trick, later picking up the trumps and attempting the club finesse to fulfill his contract. Or he could ruff immediately and learn something about the trump situation. He chose the latter course. South ruffed with the ten of spades, which held. West discarding a low heart. South next led a heart to dummy's King, but West jumped up with the Ace and shifted to clubs. South, realizing he had to lose one club trick anyway, decided to postpone his club guess and went up with the Ace in dummy, and then led the nine of spades. East covered with the Queen, forcing South to win in his own hand with the Ace.

The dummy was reentered with the trump Jack and South ruffed another diamond to get back to his own hand. The last trump was drawn and South had to tackle clubs.

He led a low club. West playing the nine, and after considerable thought played the deuce from dummy. On East's vulnerable overovercall of one diamond and subsequent heart raise, that player should have held the club King originally.

When East was forced to take with the club King, South claimed the balance.

The Time Has Arrived to Plan War on Flies, Physician Warns

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

THE common house fly will soon be with us and now is the time to lay plans for freedom from this filth-spreading pest. Of the several varieties of flies that may infest the house the common sort is known as "musca domestica." Regardless of the derivation of its Latin name, the "domestica" part is most appropriate. The fly feels "at home" and claims acquaintance with everything in the household, animate and inanimate—particularly food.

Because they are winged, flies will travel for miles in all directions more or less independently of currents of air. Their range of travel is shorter in towns than in the open country, largely because of the availability of food. A few years ago two investigators liberated several thousand marked house flies after setting traps at varying distances from the point of departure. The maximum distance traveled by any one recaptured fly was 13.1 miles.

As bacteria carriers they are excelled by none of Nature's creatures. The body and legs are covered with bristles and the insect crawling over infected material collects bacteria, carrying them to food in restaurants, homes, food shops, etc.

How many bacteria can a fly carry? Early in the season the number of bacteria on flies is comparatively small. Later as the fly travels and acquires a better knowledge of geography the totals may vary from a few thousand to several million. In a mid-season experiment the average number of bacteria found on 415 flies was about one and one-quarter million. These were surface bacteria only and the figures do not include the much larger number in the intestinal tract. Much of the spread of bacteria is due to deposits of fly excreta.

It is not an uncommon sight to see flies clustered about the top of a milk bottle that has been left on a doorstep and from which milk is later poured without thorough cleansing of the rim of the bottle. In the process of capping, a drop or two of milk may be spilled and flies will sow their infected material in this food. Numerous instances are on record in which flies have been proved to be responsible for the spread of typhoid fever, dysentery, tuberculosis and various types of intestinal diseases, particularly those that affect babies and young children in the summer time.

Any cleanup campaign must destroy the breeding places of flies. To "swat the fly" is well nigh futile, as these insects can breed faster than a million swatters can kill them. Homes and restaurants may provide adequate fly exterminators, fly traps, fly poisons, or fly sprays. These devices will add to our comfort and assist substantially in preventing fly-borne infections, but fly breeding will go on just the same unless more vigorous measures are employed.

Harpers Ferry Is Wanderbirds' Mecca Sunday

Hike Along Skyline Trail to Bear Pond Also Arranged for Club.

By Robert Shosteck.

The "Wanderbird Special," Baltimore & Ohio train, will pull out of Union Station at 8:35 Sunday for historic Harpers Ferry, the starting point of the 9-mile trek along the famous Appalachian Trail to Bear Pond. This joint trip of the Wanderbirds and the Department of Agriculture Hiking Club will be led by Dr. Neil E. Stevens, of the Bureau of Plant Industry, and will include a visit to many historic places in Harpers Ferry, as well as the interesting hike along this famous skyline trail.

Members of both clubs and readers of The Washington Post planning to go on this trip should be at Union Station not later than 8:30 in order to obtain their round-trip tickets at $1.50 each. Bring provisions for two meals since a campfire supper is planned for 5 o'clock near Harpers Ferry. The early train with the special hikers' coach leaves at 5:52 and a later train departs at 8:58 p. m. There is an additional toll bridge fee of 10 cents.

The train arrives at Harpers Ferry about 10 a. m., passing en route the famous Sugar Loaf Mountain and following the Potomac River Gorge for about 25 miles. This settlement, nestled at the juncture of the Shenandoah and Potomac, dates back to 1747 when Robert Harper established a ferry line across the river. The old arsenal and armory, erected in 1796, were seized by John Brown and 21 of his abolitionist followers in October, 1859. His short-lived regime ended with his capture in the town engine house which was recently rebuilt on Bolivar Heights.

The position of Harpers Ferry at the lower end of the Shenandoah valley made it of strategic importance during the Civil War when it was the scene of many skirmishes and a battle between the Union forces led by Col. Dixon S. Miles and Confederate troops under the famous Gen. "Stonewall" Jackson. These Civil War defenses may be seen on the heights above the town.

Leaving Harpers Ferry by the Shenandoah River toll bridge, the trail climbs steeply to the famous Chimney Rock and the top of the main ridge. The panoramic view of the town below and the two rivers is ample reward for the climb. Thomas Jefferson is reported to have said that this view was worth a trip to Europe. The trail continues south along the ridge through a sparsely timbered region which affords an excellent outlook of the surrounding countryside. Nearly 4 miles down the ridge we reach Bear Pond, so called because it was known to be a famous "bear wallow" in early colonial times. The hikers will lunch at a fine spring near this pond.

From the bear pond the route turns eastward along the old "Government road" which follows the slope of the ridge back to Harpers Ferry. This old road, now impassable to vehicles, was built during the Civil War and was used for the hauling of timber and charcoal. Hikers have a choice of eating their supper at a campfire in the vicinity of the town, or buying it in a restaurant. The hikers' train should reach Washington by 7:30 p. m.

Hikers interested in natural history are invited to the meeting of the Biological Society, to be held tomorrow evening at the Cosmos Club. Dr. M. C. Hall will give an illustrated talk on the control of animal parasites and H. M. Smith will speak on explorations in Siam.

PROSPECTS for establishing a flexible transfer system in the Government service moved a step nearer realization yesterday.

BAKER.

At present the Federal Diary and employe organizations furnish information and other assistance, unofficially, to workers desiring to exchange jobs and locations.

The Civil Service Commission last night gave assurance in a letter to E. Claude Babcock, president, American Federation of Government Employes, that his ideas will be given careful consideration, and points out its own desire to make the Civil Service a career service. An excerpt follows:

". . . the plan under consideration would result, among other things, in bringing to the attention of appointing officers employes in the service who are qualified for higher grade work. The commission's interest in making the Federal Civil Service a real career service is well known, and any transfer plan approved by the commission will have for its principal objective the promotion of career opportunities for qualified Civil Service employes . . ."

The commission balked at establishing transfer facilities when approached several weeks ago, on the grounds of added expense. Mr. Babcock has submitted a plan whereby such services can be furnished without additional expense or increased personnel.

His specific suggestions for a transfer plan to avoid undue expense were that the commission accept form 375 from persons desirous of transfer, and that these forms be submitted in appropriate cases in addition to certificates of eligibles from the register when such certificates are requested by employing officials. These forms would be submitted for information only, to be followed by regular transfer procedure where the appointing officer desired to take such action.

It is Mr. Babcock's contention that where employes are unhappy in their environment, whether because the locality is not conducive to health, or for other adequate reasons, morale in the service would be improved by facilitating their transfer to more congenial surroundings.

Entomologist Wins Scholarship.

Dr. Richard E. Blackwelder, entomologist, National Museum, has been awarded the Walter Rathbone Bacon Traveling Scholarship for an intensive study of the staphylinid beetles of the West Indies, it was announced last night at the Smithsonian.

Dr. Bleckwelder will collect these curious little beetles, comprising one of the largest and least known animal families on earth, on 25 West Indian islands. Because of the small size and, as a rule, economic unimportance of this family, it has been neglected.

Col. Cooper to Be Tried May 13 on Bank Charge

Col. Wade H. Cooper, former president of the Commercial National Bank, now in the hands of a receiver, will be tried in the District Supreme Court May 13 on a charge of misapplying funds of the bank, Justice Jesse C. Adkins ruled yesterday in response to a demand by the banker that his case be given a definite assignment on the criminal calendar.

On Monday, Col. Cooper interrupted a trial to demand that he be given a chance to face the charges which he vehemently denies. He said he had been in court on four occasions "ready, willing and anxious" to go to trial but had never been able to get the Government to consent to a hearing.

Peery Asked To Back Bill For Highway

Editor Urges Governor Cooperate With U. S. on Scenic Drive.

Executive Told Work Will Start if He'll Assure Aid on Rights.

By the Associated Press.

Waynesboro, Va., May 2.—Louis Spilman, president of the Virginia Press Association and new head of the Eastside Shenandoah Highway Association, in an open letter today appealed to Gov. Peery to promise recommendations to the 1936 General Assembly of an appropriation sufficient to cover costs of all rights-of-way needed in Virginia for the proposed Shenandoah-Great Smoky Parkway Scenic highway.

Mr. Spilman said he was "reliably informed" on a recent visit to Washington that the Federal Government is ready to begin work on the roadway as soon as Gov. Peery assures Secretary of the Interior Ickes that he will recommend such an appropriation.

The parkway, as already surveyed by Federal engineers, would link the Shenandoah National Park of Virginia with the Great Smoky National Park of North Carolina and Tennessee.

Cites Clearance Needs.

"I am convinced," Mrs. Spillman stated, "that the Federal Government is ready to start work on this magnificent mountain-top roadway, and that the only barrier in the way of immediate construction lies is your refusal to assure Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes that you will recommend to the 1936 Virginia General Assembly an appropriation sufficient to insure rights-of-way—200 feet for the road proper and 400 feet of scenic easement on each side of this strip.

"I am reliably informed that when you conferred recently with Mr. Ickes in Washington the Secretary of the Interior told you the Government was ready to proceed with parkway construction if you would give your word that you would recommend to the Virginia Legislature a right-of-way appropriation.

"It has been estimated that the maximum costs of rights of way through Virginia will not exceed $100,000 and that $50,000 would come even nearer footing the bill. Surely, you are not fully aware of what this gigantic parkway will mean to Virginia or you would unhesitatingly give Secretary Ickes the assurance he seeks.

Sees Job for Thousands.

"Construction of the parkway in Virginia will mean immediately employment for thousands of men; it will mean distribution of perhaps $25,000,000 in money, and it will bring to Virginia and the United States a scenic highway unmatched anywhere in the world with the possible exception of some short stretches in Switzerland.

"I realize that you could not, nor do I believe it would be required, according to information I have, issue a guarantee that a parkway right-of-way appropriation bill would pass the 1936 General Assembly. However, I am told, all the Secretary of the Interior asks is that you recommend passage of such a bill.

"You are to be complimented on your consistent caution in matters involving the expenditure of State money, but it would seem the course of better judgment, in this instance, to cooperate fully with Mr. Ickes, and make possible the loosening of the strings on this veritable flood of Federal money."

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Nice Paroles Baltimore Man So He Can Die in Mother's Home

Assault Prisoner Can't Live Long, Physician Tells Governor.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., May 2.—William C. Blake, Baltimore man serving a 21-year term here for criminal assault, is to be paroled so that he may die outside prison walls.

Gov. Harry W. Nice announced today that he would grant a conditional parole to Blake on grounds that the prisoner is suffering from tuberculosis and "will not survive many weeks." He will be paroled, providing no objection is offered, in custody of his mother, Mrs. Susan Finch, at South Richmond, Va.

If at any time during the parole physicians report that Blake's condition has improved, the parole commissioner will have power to order his return to the penitentiary to finish out the sentence which began April 30, 1929. The Governor, in a formal statement on the case, said:

"The matter comes to me through reports of Dr. John F. Aubrey, physician in charge of the Maryland Penitentiary, who certified that he is suffering from tuberculosis. Dr. Aubrey gives it as his opinion that Burke will not survive many weeks."

Blake, former Baltimore street car motorman, at first was sentenced to death for the assault, but was given a new trial and was sentenced to 21 years. Some time before that trial, he had been acquitted of a criminal assault charge in Annapolis.

Fauquier Body Combines Tax With 75c Rate

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Warrenton, Va., May 2.—Boosting the tax rate 10 cents per $100 valuation, the Fauquier County Board of Supervisors have announced that county levies formerly known as the school tax and county government tax, will be combined into a general levy of 75 cents.

Under the former method of taxation 50 cents per $100 went to the schools and 15 cents to the costs of operation for the county government.

It was also announced that several districts will levy additional taxes as follows:

Marshall, school tax, 8 cents, road tax, 12 cents, total 95; Scott, school tax 5 cents, total 80 cents; Center, school tax 10 cents, total 85 cents; Cedar Run, school tax 3 cents, total 78 cents; Lee, school tax 20 cents, total 95; the Plains, school tax 5 cents, total 80 cents; Warrenton, school tax 10 cents, total 85 cents; Town of Remington, school tax 20 cents, total 95 cents.

The board appropriated a sum, not to exceed $90,000, for the operating expenses of the schools out of the general levy.

Board Asks $705,000 For River Project

A request for $705,000 to dig a cut-off through Jones Neck on James River, Virginia, was one of the first to be made by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to Frank C. Walker, National Emergency Council director. This information was furnished yesterday to Representative Montague, of Richmond, by the office of the chief of Army engineers, according to the Associated Press.

The sum asked will not complete the James River project, but the engineers said it was as much as could be used profitably on the work during the fiscal year beginning July 1.

Virginia to Add Ten CCC Camps For New Quota

Expansion to 7,500 Roll Calls for Total of 26 Sites in State.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., May 2.—The State conservation and development commission was advised today that the Civilian Conservation Corps expansion program called for 26 camps for Virginia, including 10 new locations.

The State's basic quota is 7,500 persons between June 15 and August 31.

Nine of the camps will be in private forests, seven in national forests, six on State camps and four on military reservations.

The camps on new locations, to be established at an early date, are: F-16, George Washington National Forest, Amherst County; F-17, George Washington National Forest, Bedford; F-18, George Washington National Forest, Amherst; P-79, private forest, Dickenson; P-80, private, Chesterfield; P-81, private Amherst; P-82, private, Louisa; P-88, private, Amelia; P-89, private, Cumberland; P-90, private, Dinwiddie.

Re-establishments will be made in Augusta, Rockbridge, and Rockingham counties in the George Washington National Forest, in Smythe County in the Unaka National Forest area; on private forests in Warren and King and Queen counties, in the South State Park in Allegheny County; the Hungry Mother State Park Smythe, Fairy Stone State Park in Patrick, Swift Creek State Park in Chesterfield, and two in the Chopawamsic State Park in Prince William County.

Two will be located at Fort Monroe, in Elizabeth City County, and two at Fort Belvoir, in Fairfax County.

Maryland to Get 13 CCC Camps

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, May 2.—F. W. Besley, State forester, said today ten new Civilian Conservation Corps camps have been selected in Maryland, and three others have been approved, but the exact sites have not been selected.

Five of the new camps, all for reforestation projects, will be in Garrett County. Two will be in Worcester County where mosquito control projects will be undertaken, and one will be at Prettyboy Dam, near Baltimore.

Two camps are to be on Federal property, on the experimental farm at Beltsville, he stated.

The CCC enrolees assigned to mosquito control work will open up ditches to the brackish water of marshlands and pools, permitting tidal water to enter them freely.

House Speeds Action On Virginia Judgeship

The House Judiciary Committee yesterday authorized Representative Montague, of Richmond, to ask for a special rule for consideration of his bill to create an additional Federal judgeship in the Eastern Virginia district, according to the Associated Press.

Such a rule would give priority to the measure, which already has been reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee. Montague plans to appear in person before the rules committee to make the request.

"The Bride of Frankenstein" Causes Goose Flesh and Shudders at RKO-Keith's

'Horror' Film Is Scarey, But Of Old School

By Nelson B. Bell.

"THE BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN." Universal picturization of a screen play by John L. Balderston and William Hurlbut, featuring Boris Karloff, Colin Clive, Elsa Lanchester, O. P. Heggie, Una O'Connor, Gavin Gordon and Douglas Walton. Directed by James Whale. Reviewed Wednesday afternoon.

One more Frankenstein, the hideous man-made monster patched together from fragments of cadavers ghoulishly purloined from graveyards and vivified by the scientific legerdemain of a young man who finds himself possessed of a glimmering of the secret of the creation of a sort of synthetic life stalks the earth, leaving a horrifying trail of violent death in his wake.

As if this Frankenstein specter were not gruesome enough, left to his own homicidal devices, he now has been afforded a mate whose restoration to a semblance of life is no less terrifying than his own reincarnation from a number of eerie sarcophagi.

It would be my guess that "The Bride of Frankenstein," which opened yesterday at RKO-Keith's Theater, will not prove the sensational success that its predecessor, "Frankenstein," was as one of the early "shockers," along with "Dracula" and "White Zombie.

This is the sort of thing that can not be repeated with the deadly effect of its first assault upon human consciousness. The edge is off. Having been scared stiff once by Mr. Boris Karloff's uncanny facility in the visualization of horrendous figures, paralyzing in their suggestion of his first fearful reactions.

Not a Pretty Tale.

There is, of course, something less than the suggestion of playful camaraderie in the young scientist's request that one of his murderous assistants go out and secure him a young, warm, feminine beating heart in order that his monstrosity may have his bride, but even so, the impact is not what it was three or four years ago when "Frankenstein" first blazed a bloody trail across the screens of the country.

In the matter of make-ups, "The Bride of Frankenstein" is a masterpiece. I can recall no earlier film, even when the "horror cycle," so-called, was at its height, in which quite such repellant effects have been achieved as in this simulation of human bodies patched together and given a specious vitality by a sort of electro-psychosis in which thunder storms seem to play an amazingly important part.

If any one ever has seen anything more ghastly than Mr. Karloff's monster in this picture, I should like to know when and where so that I might avoid it. The spectacle of the mummified bride being brought back to the land of the seemingly living by the gentle devices already hinted at, is scarcely more to be construed as a spectacle of sweetness, gayety and light!

And after Henry Frankenstein has gone to all the trouble of "creating" a mate for the rehabilitated corpses of many dead, it turns out that the incarnate fiend and his bride will have none of each other! The monster by this time has learned that there is an element of kindness tempering the activities of the human race and will have no traffic with the synthetic creature brought back from the dead for his especial comfort, nor she with him!

So He Blows Up the Place!

In a moment of resentment, as a matter of fact, he pulls the fatal lever that blows the tower-laboratory, in which he was conceived, to bits, only Henry Frankenstein and his wife, Elizabeth, escaping the catastrophic completeness of the destruction wrought by a cataclysm of the first order.

"The Bride of Frankenstein," in its frankly sensational and morbid class, is a well-done and luridly impressive bit of film-making. James Whale has a faculty for realistic effect that is well exemplified in the present subject. Karloff, of course, is the present-day successor of Lon Chaney in the matter of grotesque and imposing make-up. Elsa Lanchester, who is Mrs. Charles Laughton in private life, seems peculiarly equipped to fortify the picture's most astonishing moments in the title role.

Henry Frankenstein, as was the case in the original screen play, to which this may be said to be a slightly denatured sequel, is played by Colin Clive. His ominous mentor, Dr. Pretorious, is impersonated by Ernest Thesiger with a true sense of the awful. O. P. Heggie, as a blind hermit, whose violin strikes a responsive chord in the imperfect consciousness of the monster, deserves a better assignment, but does his brief part with sensitiveness and feeling.

Valerie Hobson, as the scientist's helpmeet, held as a hostage by the powers of evil in the play; Una O'Connor, as an understandably terrified maid, and numerous others contribute to the ostensible suspense, excitement and horror of a film that seems just a trifle outmoded since its first edition took the country by what is popularly known as storm.

Packed 'Em In.

Even so, Keith's was packed yesterday and last night by crowds who were intrigued by the suggested sensationalism of a picture that falls little short of being precisely the sort of "shocker" Mr. Laemmle described it as being in these columns yesterday morning.

The auxiliary attractions include a natural-color cartoon comedy, "Candyland;" a new issue of the always interesting "Screen Snapshots" and a release of "Pathe Topics." These in combination provide a partial antidote for the chilling morbidity of the major feature.

If "The Bride of Frankenstein" is the sort of gory celluloid you like, RKO-Keith's is the appointed spot for you this week—and probably next

Youth Comes to Friday's Screen

Appearing above at left is Maureen O'Sullivan, whose dramatic stature has been growing continuously since her appearance as the rebellious younger sister in the screen version of Rudolf Besier's "The Barrets of Wimpole Street," starring Norma Shearer. Miss O'Sullivan now comes to the Palace screen, or will tomorrow, in support of George Arliss in "Cardinal Richelieu." Twentieth Century's filmization of the Bulwer-Lytton play. At right, above, is Margaret Lindsay, who appears opposite Warren William in "The Case of the Curious Bride," also opening tomorrow on the screen of the Earle Theater, where Gus Arnheim and his orchestra will headline the stage show.

Dr. Thomas M. Parrott, of the professorial staff of Princeton University, will speak before the Shakespeare Society of Washington on May 13 upon the topic of George Chapman's contemporary writings on the bard. Scenes from Mr. Chapman's play, "All Fools," will be presented at this meeting in Whitby Hall of the Girls School of the Washington Cathedral. On May 9, the Shakespeare Society will present "King Henry VIII" in the auditorium of Roosevelt High School, Thirteenth and Allison streets northwest. The cast will include, among others of local note, Maurice Jarvis, Jesse Veitch, Martin Haven, Mabel Owens Wilcox, Thomas Cahill, John Sikken, Ada Louise Townsend, Miss Yerby Pannill and Milton Hirshfield.

Roadsiders' Plans.

Two old-time melodramas, two new try-out plays and two revivals of plays that have made Broadway history, are scheduled for production by the Roadside Theater in its second "barn theater" season in the National Capital.

"After Dark," by Dion Boucicault, author of "The Octoroon," last summer's initial offering by this talented group, will inaugurate the Roadsiders' season on Monday, June 17. One more play, not yet selected, will complete the season's roster.

The plays so far decided upon are "After Dark," "Detachment," by E. M. Leslie, a "try-out;" "To Die at Dawn," another unknown, described as a thrilling melodrama; Paul Potter's dramatization of George du Maurier's "Trilby"; "The Henrietta," Bronson Howard's popular comedy hit of about the turn of the century, and "American Songbird," by Derek Fox and Turner Bullock, another manuscript production.

Order Not Determined.

The order in which these works will be presented has not as yet been definitely determined, but each play will open on a Monday night and will be kept on for a two-week run. There will be no matinee or Sunday performances. The opening nights will be June 17, July 1, 15 and 29, August 12 and 26 and September 9.

The decision to run each play two weeks is the natural outgrowth of the company's experience of last summer, when it was found necessary to prolong each engagement to constantly increasing patronage.

Last summer's engagement of the Roadside Theater Co., in the old shoe heel factory out the Rockville pike beyond Bethesda, Md., was epochal in the history of Washington's summer theatricals. It is expected that this second season will in every way surpass the first.

Comes a cordial note from Daniel Frohman, back in his Lyceum Theater on Forty-fifth street between Broadway and Sixth avenue in New York, saying pleasant things about The Post's interest in his Actors Fund Benefit, celebrated at the National last Sunday night upon the opening of the eleventh annual "little season" of the National Theater Players. Mr. Frohman remarks upon the irony of the situation that presented itself when the musicians' local union insisted on its members being paid for their services Sunday night by saying that upon his return to New York he discovered that Damrosch had sent a few musicians to the Actors Fund to be taken care of! A droll world, my masters.

Honest Confession Note.

That stuttering over the air through Station WJSV yesterday at 12:15 p. m.—if any—was due to the fact that Herb Cook and His Three Little Words were rehearsing in the next studio just the other side of that big glass partition.

How do you mean, keep my mind on my work!

The New Week Promises Fine Entertainment

Pictures, Plays and Parks Beckon to Those Who Seek Diversion.

Tomorrow night the National Theater Players will launch their second week by presenting another new play that still is a hit on Broadway. "Petticoat Fever" will be the item in question—the play that Dennis King was expected to bring to the Capital on his way from Chicago to New York, but didn't. The story concerns the romantic adventures of a radio operator on the bleak and remote coast of Labrador, whose igloo, if that is what it was, was visited unexpectedly by Sir James Fenton and his fiancee, Ethel Campton, whose plane gets far off its course. Roy Roberts will have the role created by Mr. King and Nancy Sheridan also will find herself congenially cast in this comedy by Mark Reed. Edwina Wise and Warren Parker, new ingenue and juvenile, respectively, will make their bows with the Players on this occasion. There will be the customary Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

Beginning Saturday morning, the chief screen attraction at the Belasco Theater will be "Don Quixote," starring the eminent Russian baritone, Feodor Chaliapin. This is heralded as one of the most impressive productions ever brought to the screen by the exiled German director, G. W. Pabst. Despite its foreign origin, the picture is entirely in English, Chaliapin singing in our native tongue, thus obviating the necessity of overlaid titles. The English George Robey and the American Sydney Fox are important members of the supporting cast. The feature will be augmented by the usual short-reel subjects of varied interest and content.

• • • •

George Arliss, the distinguished British actor, who is only now concluding an exceptionally successful engagement on a local screen in the role of Wellington in "The Iron Duke," will be the pictured star at Loew's Palace Theater for the week beginning tomorrow in the title role of "Cardinal Richelieu," twentieth century's screen version of the famous Bulwer-Lytton play in which Walter Hampden recently was seen in the Capital. Arliss will be supported in this vibrant melodrama by Maureen O'Sullivan, Douglas Dumbrille, Cesar Romero, Francis Lister and others of note. The bill will be completed by short-reel subjects and a new issue of the newsreel, with running comment by Edwin C. Hill.

• • • •

"The Case of the Curious Bride," a screen adaptation of the mystery thriller by Erle Stanley Gardner, recounting some of the further exploits in crime detection of Perry Mason, will be the principal screen offering at the Earle Theater for the week beginning tomorrow. On the stage Gus Arnheim will present his famous orchestra and a complete revue, featuring his radio stars of 1935. Among the Arnheim principals are John and Edna Torrence, dancers; Gene Sheldon, the Downey sisters, Jimmy Newell, Maxine Tappen, Woody Herman and Johnny Hamilton. The screen play has Warren William and Margaret Lindsay as its principal players, supported by Claire Dodd, Donald Woods, Allen Jenkins and Winifred Shaw.

When the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer screen version of Victor Herbert's melodious operetta, "Naughty Marietta," opens on the screen at Loew's Fox tomorrow, Capital theatergoers will be treated to one of the finest musical films ever made. Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy are the singing stars who appear in the roles created on the stage by Emma Trentini and Orville Harrold. They are supported by Frank Morgan, Elsa Lanchester (Mrs. Charles Laughton, also appearing in "The Bride of Frankenstein" at RKO Keith's), Douglas Dumbrille, Joseph Cawthorn and a long list of other notables under the direction of W. S VanDyke. On the stage, Dave Apollon will play a return engagement with his "International Revue," a splendid stage show in which Lowe, Burnoff and Wensley, Danzi Goodell, the Seven Arabian Sheiks, 12 Danny Dare Girls and numerous others are prominent.

Al Jolson and Ruby Keeler in "Go Into Your Dance" will continue their downtown run on the screen of the Metropolitan Theater for the week beginning tomorrow Glenda Farrell, Patsy Kelley, Helen Morgan and various other topliners support the co-stars, who appear together for the first time, and Bobby Connolly has contrived some ensemble effects for the dancing girls that are unique. Short-reel subjects and a full 15-minute newsreel will round out the bill.

• • • •

An eerie screen story that is said to outshock all of the recent "shockers" will take possession of the Columbia screen tomorrow when "The Mark of the Vampire" will launch a week's engagement. The foremost roles are played by Lionel Barrymore, Bela ("Dracula") Lugosi, Jean Hersholt, Lionel Atwill and Elizabeth Allan, with Donald Meek, Jessie Ralph and Ivan Simpson in support. Tod Browning, master director of the chills-and-shivers school of melodrama, was responsible for the production. News events and other short-reel subjects will complete the program.

Getting off to a flying start over last week-end, Glen Echo Park once more has taken its place as the foremost al-fresco amusement center in or about the National Capital. With "The Pretzel," a new and thrilling ride in the dark, attracting a great deal of attention, the early season crowds still find time to enjoy the coaster dip, the whip, the old mill, the midway and all of the other familiar features of a park that boasts in excess of 50 amusements. Nightly, except Sundays, McWilliams' Orchestra plays for dancing in the Spanish Garden ballroom under the direction of Phil O'Brien. Admission to the park is free at all times.

• • • •

Little Theater

"WAR IS A RACKET." Eureka release, produced, edited and directed by Samuel Cummins, in collaboration with Jacques Roerel. Narration by A. L. Alexander. Reviewed Wednesday afternoon by W. A Whitney.

Washington's complement of first-run theaters once more reached the imposing number of eight when, yesterday, the Little Theater resumed its one-time policy of presenting outstanding pictures of domestic and foreign origin.

Selected for the inaugural bill, "War Is a Racket" was not a particularly fortunate choice, despite the timeliness of the subject, for in their effort to present the munitions manufacturing side of war and at the same time not to make a war picture, the producers have fabricated a document which is neither the scathing antimunitions tirade nor the trenchant antiwar preachment it might have been.

The picture opens with excerpts from the English-made "Thunder in the Air," a picture when screened in the editor's office gives him the idea of sending out his star reporter to determine the public reaction to the question "Is war a racket?" The reporter, A. L. Alexander, starts out, and the remaining footage recounts the testimony of a sociologist, a bride-about-to-be, a business man, a goldstar mother, a former soldier, a munitions manufacturer and a clergyman, all of whom reply in the affirmative and in no uncertain terms.

The several diatribes are vehemently read, but seem to lack the spontaneity and genuineness to give the invective shot at manufacturers of the sinews of war the real force and power it ought to have. Accompanying the arguments that are advanced are pictures of warfare illustrative of the things which the disputants would abolish through some means of "taking the profit out of war," which measures are as nebulous as the arguments themselves are trite.

Some five years have elapsed since the Little Theater foreswore its policy now resumed, but the gap in cinematographic continuity was effectively bridged in the supporting program, a series of short subjects possessing a greater degree of entertainment value than the feature. From the annals of 1929 comes the farce "So This Is Marriage," and from those of the following year an early Eddie Gribbon (in sound) called "Swell People." From a more recent period is the musical "Under the Broadway Moon," featuring Isham Jones and his orchestra, with Vera Van as soloist.

ONE OF THE GREATEST PICTURES EVER TO COME OUT OF HOLLYWOOD

CARDINAL RICHELIEU
20th Century Picture starring
GEORGE ARLISS
with Maureen O'Sullivan • Edward Arnold
DARRYL ZANUCK production • Released thru UNITED ARTISTS

The theatre has presented Richelieu many times by the greatest players. Booth, Sothern, Mantell, made the role their most memorable success.

Now, an American producer, Darryl Zanuck, Twentieth Century Pictures, has rendered an even more brilliant and impressive epic.

Against a background of regal splendor and pomp, amid scenes of intrigue and cunning, of marching armies and angry riot, Mr. Arliss breathes life into one of the great figures in history—and reveals the reason for that greatness.

Nellie Flag, Filly Contender in Derby, Impressive in Workout

This Morning...

With Shirley Povich

Chicago, May 2.

Mr. Gus H. Fan, Gen'l Delivery, Washington, D. C.

Dear Gus:

It's getting so, Gus, that there's only five steady jobs in this Washington ball team, and at the rate Bucky Harris is changing his batting order these days some of the lads going into the line-up meet themselves coming out. The way Bucky promotes 'em and demotes 'em is a caution.

POVICH.

Who'd a thought last month down in Biloxi that such fellows as Cecil Travis, Joe Kuhel and Johnny Stone, the warp and woof of the team's strength, would be sitting on the bench against left-handed pitching, but that's just what Harris has ordered. He's discovered that the club is top-heavy with left-handers against southpaw pitching.

That's where Ossie Bluege, Red Kress and Fred Schulte come in. Bluege is on third, Schulte in the outfield and Kress on first when southpaws are facing the Nats, Gus. The only left-handed hitters who can hold their jobs against southpaw pitching are Heinie Manush, Buddy Myer and Cliff Bolton. There's only one way to pitch to those guys, whether you're a right-hander or a southpaw—pitch and duck.

But Jake Powell and Lyn Lary will get steady work against any kind of pitching. At the rate Lary is fielding, he has only to hit .200 to be a tremendous asset to the team. If he got credit in his batting average for the hits he cuts down at shortstop he'd be batting a cool .650. The Nats miss Joe Cronin out there at shortstop, Gus, like you miss a boil on your neck.

THIS Powell has been no drawback, either, Gus. Bucky Harris was beginning to regard him last week with suspicion—the suspicion that he couldn't hit major league pitching—but that was last week. He's getting fond looks from Harris now, Gus, after hitting .333 in the Nats' nine games since leaving home. And you remember that homer he hit in the Yankee Stadium with two on, and that game-winning double he got off Lefty Gomez yesterday.

Jake's getting to be the fair-haired lad on the ball club, Gus, with his hitting and fielding. He can roam that outfield, you know. It must be the gypsy in him. Fred Schulte, who was a 1-to-2 shot to get his center-field job back last week, is now being quoted at 10 to 1. By the way, that homer of Jake's the other day is the first and last home run hit by the Nats this season.

Bucky has stopped wondering about Cliff Bolton, too. As long as he can tote that big bat up to the plate, he's got a steady job. I know he's slow on bunts, and he's apt to throw that ball away, but when he's up there at the plate, Buddy, the pitcher's in a hole. He's the outfielders' problem child, Gus. When they shade left field on him he hits to right, and, as the saying goes, vice versa.

Bolton's a late swinger, as a rule, like Travis, who batted .319 last year, hitting to the same field. You'd think Travis was a newcomer to the league, the way the Yankees played him. Fellows like Gehrig, Dickey and Lazzeri ought to know by this time that he's a sure shot to dump his hits into left, but the Yankee outfielders didn't give an inch of ground when Travis stepped to the plate.

WELL, Gus, Bucky Harris is still looking for that fourth starting pitcher. He's tried 'em all now except young Henry Coppola, and they've all flopped. Monte Weaver, Walter Stewart, Ed Linke and Leon Pettit each have had a shot at the job and fizzled, but there was a ray of sunshine yesterday in the performance of both Pettit and Monte Weaver.

Weaver didn't give the Yanks a sign of a hit in those last two innings, and he was throwing a "downer" that had the Yankees swinging around their heels. The next time Harris has a job for a fourth pitcher it will go to Weaver.

This Pettit didn't do so badly against the Yanks, Gus. He gave 'em only seven hits in the eight innings he pitched and his own wildness and errors figured in five of their six runs. But Harris wants him as a relief pitcher chiefly, and some day he's going to give you a thrill.

One of these days in the late innings of a close game, Harris is going to shove Pettit in there for one particular reason, and somebody is going to get a surprise, Gus, because Pettit is going to pick him off third base. He picked Lazzeri off today, and he had Bob Johnson picked off in Philadelphia only to see Travis drop the ball. That half-balk motion of his is bad news to base runners.

Well, Gus, I'll be seein' ya. Please pardon the scrawl. S. L. P.

P. S.—Why didn't you answer my last letter?

Gallico Reaches Derby Scene; Tells All—Reports He's Off

By Paul Gallico.

A Special Correspondent.

LOUISVILLE, May 2.—Well, folks, here I am at the Kentucky Derby, and I am so excited I can hardly hold my hand steady around a mint julip. I have been sent down here in order that you may all profit by my knowledge and experience and inside dope right from the feeding box, or nosegay, as it is sometimes called, and as soon as I have had a chance to go down into the padlock and get a line on what clockers are going to ride the horses, I hop to be able to send along some pretty hot pips.

Man and boy, I have been coming to these Kentucky Derbies for the last 50 years now, and I well remember the first one back in 1875. It was just after the Civil War and I was a drummer boy under Gen. Andrew Jackson, or "Stonewall," as I nicknamed him because of the quaint way he had of twirling his mustaches.

Discharged after the Battle of Lexington, I went over to the Derby and watched Aristides, the little red gelding and the sweetest mare you ever laid your eyes on, win it in what we call a walk along.

But that is neither here nor elsewhere. What all you lazy stay-at-homes want to know is what horse is going to win Saturday, and all about the celebrities and the crowd yelling "They're on" when the jokies climb into their seats at the starting line, 4 miles away over hill and dale.

I am not very good at that descriptive stuff, being more of an expert than a writer, but in my humble way I will do my best to convey to you the thrilling picture when the horses take the first hurdles at Dead Man's curve, the dramatic moment at the Brook jump, and the thunder of 100,000 persons giving tongue to that age-old race-track prayer "Ride him, cowboy!"

Much of the color of this great event may elude my poor, weak pen, but one thing you may be sure of: I will tell you who won the race and how it was won—just as soon as I can get the information from the Associated Press, which will be right next to me in the press box and which keeps track of every horse as it passes each quarter-mile post.

I will tell you about the cries of the rookies who bet you odd or even on the horses, the cheerful winnowing of the happy horses in their stalls as their attendants currycomb them in the morning, a process also known as "scratching" and reported on the program as "such and such a horse was

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Keyser, W. Va., May 2.—In the first of a series of registered trap-shooting tournaments, preceding the Eastern zone shoot to be held here June 19 and 29, E. E. Cuthbert, of Winchester, won first place in the singles with a score of 99 out of a possible 100 clay targets at the Meadow Lark Gun Club. G. J. Renner, of Winchester, and W. E. Whitefield, of Westernport, tied for second with scores of 94.

Edgar H. MacDonald, of Headsville, W. Va., won first place in the handicap event by breaking 47 out of 50 targets, and E. E. Cuthbert took second place by shattering 46 birds.

Smashing 25 out of a possible 15 pairs, C. J. Renner had high gun in the doubles. E. E. Cuthbert and E. H. MacDonald were deadlocked for second place in the event with scores of 24.

Heavy Going Is Forecast Saturday

Turf Writers Pick Lone Filly in Race as One to Beat.

By Alan Gould.

Associated Press Sports Editor.

LOUISVILLE, May 2.—Churchill Downs, scene of the sixty-first running of the Kentucky Derby this Saturday, was struck simultaneously today by a deluge of rain and a fresh wave of sentiment for Nellie Flag, granddaughter of the renowned Man o' War and the only filly entered in the year's first big race for 3-year-old thoroughbred honors.

The historic 1-mile oval at the Downs, turned into a quagmire by an early morning cloudburst, was hit by another heavy thunderstorm tonight. The weather man holds out hope of clearing skies, with cool breezes, by Saturday afternoon, but it seems certain the going will be heavy, if not actually muddy, when the Derby field parades to the strains of "My Old Kentucky Home." The track was fetlock deep in mud tonight after a downpour that was equally as heavy as the previous storm.

The weather, besides dealing a blow to the carnival atmosphere with which Louisville has been rampant all week in preparation for its celebrated horse race, also developed a fresh flock of arguments centering around the mud-running qualities of the Derby field, but the gentlemen of the press agreed that the lady in the case—Nellie Flag—likes any kind of going. In fact, they conceded she may prove a better mud-runner than any colt in the field and unquestionably has the best chance to win of any member of her sex since Regret, the one and only filly to capture the Derby, showed the way home in 1915.

Nine Writers Favor Filly.

A poll tonight by the Associated Press among more than a score of turf writers, here from all parts of the country, showed nine favoring Nellie Flag, with seven nominating William Woodward's Omaha to win and only three picking Today, Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney's colt, which won the Wood Memorial at Jamaica last Saturday and now rates the betting choice at 3-to-1 odds.

Edward Riley Bradley's Boxthorn, choice of the "hardboots" and hope of the Idle Hour Farm for a fifth Derby triumph; Mrs. Walter M. Jeffords' Commonwealth and Roman Soldier, Texas Derby winner, each received the vote of one newspaper picker.

Apparently it will be considered a distinct upset if one of these six horses fails to win, although Mrs. Payne Whitney's Plat Eye has had a substantial following and justified its backing by turning in some fine performances this spring. Unconfirmed rumors circulated, however, that Plat Eye had shown some traces of lameness in a workout. Railbirds also reported that Commonwealth had been unimpressive in an early morning gallop, but it wouldn't be Derby time without such alarms and excursions in the prospects.

Goes Mile in 1:40 2-5.

The feature of today's workouts by Derby candidates was the way Nellie Flag stepped a mile. The chestnut daughter of American

Nationals Face Chisox Today In Opener

Hadley Is Due to Hurl as Invasion of the West Gets Under Way.

By Shirley L. Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

CHICAGO, May 2.—The West begins for the Nats here tomorrow, when they launch a three-game series with the White Sox, who at this writing are enjoying their disguise as a second-place ball club, only a game out of the lead.

In his first effort to unmask the lowly rated but highly surprising White Sox, Manager Bucky Harris will send Bump Hadley to the mound tomorrow. Opposed to Hadley will be young Lester Tietje, whose name was poison to the Nats' in the waning weeks of last season, but who this year has been no more successful than a note of protest to Germany

The White Sox have been riding high, however, on the wings of their base hits. Six of the team's regulars are batting over .300 and thus it is not difficult to comprehend that they have won 9 of their 13 starts this season.

Dykes Will Return.

A seventh .300 hitter returns to the Chicago line-up tomorrow when Manager Jimmy Dykes supplants young Marty Hopkins at third base after a siege of illness.

Two straight defeats by the Cleveland Indians, however, have tempered Chicago's enthusiasm for the White Sox despite their high station in the league's vital statistics The rookie outfielder, Ray Radcliffe, who was stealing the early season show from the expensive Vernon Washington, has lost 100 points in his batting average during the past week and is down to 259.

Zeke Bonura, the league's home run leader with six circuit clouts, has shown no indications of a batting slump, maintaining his average at .360. But the name that leads all the rest, curiously, in the Sox's batting statistics is that of Jackie Hayes, normally a .270 clouter, who

3 Irish Officials? No! Declares Ross

One in Ring—McLarnin—Enough, He Says.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 2.—One Irishman? Yes!

Four Irishmen? Postively no!

With that advance warning to the New York State athletic commission that he doesn't mind fighting one Irishman in the ring, but will not tolerate an Irish referee and two Irish judges, Barney Ross, Chicago's Jewish contender, left for his camp in the Catskill Mountains today to train for his third welterweight championship battle with Jimmy McLarnin, the belting Vancouver Celt.

Barney, confident of not only licking McLarnin, but of knocking him out in their fight in New York May 28, let his co-manager, Art Winch, do most of the talking as he said good-by to his friends and promised to get the welterweight crown to make up for the lightweight title he surrenderd voluntarily.

An Old-Timer To Win Open, Is Belief

By Charles H. Hamilton.

A Special Correspondent.

RICHMOND, VA., May 2.—Out of the ranks of the old-timers will come this year's National Open champion at Oakmont, declares Wee Bobby Cruickshank, of Richmond, who three times has had the coveted title in his grasp only to lose in heart-breaking finishes. Oakmont is no place for the younger stars to shine, believes Wee Bobby, and he adds that he thinks 298 will be the winning score.

"Oakmont is one of the toughest courses in the world," said the Wee Scot, who tied with Bobby Jones for the Open 12 years ago. "That course calls for more than just shot-making. You've got to have a great heart and you've got to show great headwork. This 1935 championship will be won with the head just as much as with the hands.

Sees 298 Winning.

"Personally," he said, "I look for one of the 'old-timers' to win. I'm like Walter Hagen in that respect. A lot of the younger players are good—fellows like Henry Picard, especially—but it takes a player who has been through the mill to lead at Oakmont. Tommy Armour won there with 301, playing the

Horse Show's Time Table Arranged

55 Classes in Three-Day Program Starting Next Thursday.

HUNTERS, open jumpers, saddle horses, ponies, officers' chargers and troopers' mounts all will have their inning during the annual National Capital Horse Show, which open at Bradley Farms next Thursday morning for a three-day meeting.

Competitions for every type of show horse are included on the time table completed yesterday by Hubbert R. Quinter, secretary and manager of the event, which is regarded as one of the most important shows to be held in the East this year.

55 Classes Slated.

Fifty-five classes have been arranged and the program stands out as one of the most complete and pretentious ever drafted by the local association. Included are 35 hunter type competitions, which always attract great attention.

With the exception of the second day, the show will open at the near-by Maryland plant each day at 10 a. m., and the classes will run throughout the entire day, with recess only for luncheon. On the second day the card is to open at 10:30.

Children to Have Day.

Children's Day is to be observed on Saturday, and all of the juvenile classes are to be disposed of that day. However, the day will not be given over to the children exclusively for the important saddle and hunter championships will be decided as well as the $200 working hunter sweepstake and

Braddock Reveals He Was Forced on Relief Eight Months Ago; Got Fight, Paid Off Debt

By Edward J. Neil.

Associated Press Sports Writer.

NEW YORK, May 2.—The story of relief case No. 2,796, and a battle against odds that dwarfs anything James J. Braddock will face in a prize ring June 13 against Heavyweight Champion Max Baer, came out today.

James J. Braddock, challenger for the top crown of the prize ring, would prefer it never came to light, for the tide has turned now, the youngsters aren't hungry, the milk bill has been paid, the rent is paid in advance, and the butcher no longer is howling for money.

But Mayor Julius L. Reich, of North Bergen, N. J., and the relief commissioner over there got to tangling politically over the distribution of aid to the needy, and Braddock's name popped out. Had the heavyweight challenger, pictured always as a young athlete rolling in wealth, swinging around the night club circuit, enjoying the best of everything, actually been on relief?

"Sure," said Braddock slowly today in his training camp at Loch Sheldrake, up in the Catskill Mountains of New York, "sure, I was. I'm not ashamed of it, either. I didn't mind for myself, but I couldn't let the kids starve."

If Braddock licks Baer June 13—and the odds, the experts say, are all against him—he'll have climbed a ladder in one year from need so great to money so plentiful as to frighten even a fiction writer. It's a story never even approximated before in a prize-fight history, weird as that is.

So desperate was Braddock last September that he applied and was given relief at $21 a month. He had had one fight during the summer, a fight in which he knocked out Corn Griffin in a preliminary of the card on which Baer demol-

U. Va. Picks Pritchett To Head Sports Set-Up

By the Associated Press.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., May 2.—Capt. Norton Goodier Pritchett has been named director of athletics and physical education at the University of Virginia, college officials announced today.

Capt. Pritchett, a native of Monroe City, Mo., has served as professor and director of athletics at Davidson College, N. C., since 1928.

In announcing his selection, President Newcomb of the university explained that "all athletic undertakings of the university, intercollegiate, intramural and physical education, are to be consolidated into a single department with a director at the head who shall be responsible under the president for all work done in this department."

President Newcomb explained further that under the new plan of athletic control there shall be an advisory council composed of three alumni, three students and three faculty members, and he is urging that the Alumni Association and the student body name their representatives in order that the council may be ready to assist the new director of athletics and physical education when he takes office in September.

"A thorough-going search has been made to find the right man," President Newcomb continued. "We are confident that in Capt. Pritchett we have found the man who most nearly combines in one person the ideal requirements for the position."

In naming Capt. Pritchett to the new athletic post the board of visitors agreed to withhold announcement until he had time to tender his resignation to the authorities at Davidson College.

Navy, Virginia Clash On Track Tomorrow

Annapolis, Md., May 2 (AP).—The Naval Academy and the University of Virginia track and field teams meet here Saturday for their eighth dual meet since 1920.

Navy has the edge in victories, having won four of the seven meets. Each of the teams holds six meet records and two are held jointly.

Dokas Wins by Four Lengths to Pay $8.10 in Pimlico Feature

Daily Double Returns $114.70; Merritt Up on Both Winners.

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

PIMLICO RACE TRACK, May 2.—Dokas, one which has been knocking at the door all during the spring season in Maryland, earned a set of brackets in the sixth and feature race here this afternoon. The number, called the Druid Hill after one of Baltimore's parks, was a mile and 70 yards.

Leo (Skinny) Fallon, a Vanderbilt contract rider, was on Dokas, which belongs to C. S. Bancroft. Fallon laid back of Soldiers Dream around the first turn and into the back stretch, made his move on the second turn and won going away by four lengths. The place went to T. F. Swords' Cohort Miss by half a length over J. B. Belk's Flaming Mamie.

Dokas was much the best and his victory was scored with such ease as to make the rest of the field of five look foolish. Two scratches probably lightened the burden of Dokas. The two withdrawn because of the sloppy track were Glen Riddle Farm's War Stripes and J. U. Gratton's Hug Again.

The winner was held at 3 to 1 in the wagering and paid off his backers at the rate of $8.10 for $2.

Double Pays $114.70.

The daily double paid $114.70 and was third from the lowest figure on the "double" board. Any of the field would have paid more than $100, with Spare Time, which ran fourth, a $1,644 proposition. The winning combination was that of Lady's Beau, in the first race, and Inscription in the third race. The "double" was a personal triumph for Jockey Bobby Merritt, and the fillies. Merritt rode both winners.

An upset marked the first race when Lady's Beau, a 6-1 shot, scored an easy victory under the handling of Jockey Merritt. Wedge Lad, of the Styker-Hockley entry, was second, two lengths away.

Third money went to Challephen. The race was run in the rain and over a track that was sopping up the water. Lady's Beau did not break well, but forged to the front entering the stretch. The winning mutuel was $14.10.

'Chase Is Thriller.

The day's steeplechase, the Mount Alto, was a thriller despite the fact that there were no falls. A field of eight accepted the issue and the jumping was excellent despite the slippery turf. The Stag II was the winner after the long trek of 2½ miles for hunters with amateur riders. Burling Cocks had the mount on The Stag II, taking the lead with three fences to go and scoring by six lengths. Old Bachelor, the early leader, was second and Cold Punch third.

Bobby Merritt rode his second winner and the completing end of the daily double in the third race. Inscription was the filly that ran a steady race to go to the front rounding the last turn to win over Chinese Indian by a half length. Army Game was third in the field of nine. Inscription paid a $7.90 mutuel.

J. V. Stewart sent a fit favorite to the post in the fourth race and she came bouncing home with the purse. With Carl Hanford riding, Good Cheer moved ahead on the swing for the stretch and had a three-length advantage at the finish. Alwintour and Vee Eight were second and third. The winner paid $5.90.

U Demon Pays $157.40.

U Demon, the horse that fell at Havre de Grace in the pile-up which caused Jockey Earl Porter to break his leg, gave the customers a jolt by winning the fifth race at a mutuel of $157.40. It was the first time the gelding has been out since the accident. U Demon ran a remarkable race, the gelding running right with the leaders in the early going, taking command in the back stretch and maintaining his advantage to the wire, where he led Lillian Z. by a length and a half. The latter was 12 lengths in front of Tartan Betsy, the favorite.

LADYS BEAU moved up fast after settling in her stride, went extremely wide rounding the turn, but closed fast when straightened into the home stretch, and came out smartly after gaining command. WEDGE LAD raced in the thick of contention and held on well for the final drive. CHALLEPHEN broke swiftly, raced GLOWING COAL into defeat, but weakened during the closing furlong. GLOWING COAL had nice speed early. BALCONY was unable to threaten. She was under light punishment. EASTER LAD was outrun. TOMMY REIGH and SECURED raced greenly.

SECOND RACE—Two and one-half miles; steeplechase for hunters, amateur riders. Purse, $1,000. Start good. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 2:53. Off at 2:53½. Winner, R. K. Mellon's br. g. THE STAG II, a stoutly trained for the first one and one-half miles, went to OLD BACHELOR without effort to assume command at the thirteenth fence, landed badly at the next two fences, but had good speed on the flat and drew out in the closing stages. OLD BACHELOR fenced nicely while setting the pace and held on willingly after being displaced. COLD PUNCH, reserved off the pace, closed with good courage when placed to a drive. ARUNDEL went imcominently and continued gamely to the end. GASTON weakened badly after making his effort going to the tenth fence. CHALICE was held safe. ROCKY SHORE did not favor the footing.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—INSCRIPTION, $7.90, $6.10, $3.50; CHINESE INDIAN, $9.80, $4.60; ARMY GAME, $2.90.

INSCRIPTION, hustled into a contending position and kept on the outside of the leaders, responded willingly for the final drive, and outstayed CHINESE INDIAN during the final drive. CHINESE INDIAN went prominently from the beginning and fought it out desperately with the winner in the closing drive. ARMY GAME worked her way up on the outside and closed gamely. SPARE TIME came with a belated spurt in the stretch run. STAR CHASE went evenly all the way. IWINTOO weakened after reaching the home stretch. JUSTA JONES could not enter contention. BROMIDE and POLLY PLUM stopped.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $900; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 3:58. Off at 4:05½. Winner, J. V. Stewart's ch. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—DOKAS, $26.00, $7.40, $5.20; ONEILL, $10.90, $5.80; HERESS, $3.60.

DAVOC followed HAGERSTOWN closely in the first half-mile, gained command approaching the home stretch, but had to be strongly ridden to stall off ONEILL. The latter worked his way up steadily on the outside and was wearing the winner down at every stride through the stretch drive. HERESS saved ground while bettering her position and was gaining fast at the end. BRILLFALON could not threaten during the final issue. FREDRICK went forwardly and had no mishaps. STAROGAN went well. BONSOIR was never a factor. HAGERSTOWN tired.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MARMION, $8.10, $5.30, $3.20; BLACK FALCON, $7.90, $4.20; POPO, $2.60.

MARMION, nicely handled, worked his way to the leaders steadily, found racing room between horses when entering contention, took command when straightened into the home stretch and finished with speed in reserve. BLACK FALCON improved his position steadily and came with good courage in the final drive. POPO raced FLIGHT OF GOLD into defeat and held on gamely under punishment. SMEAR steered wide from the beginning was permitted to fall back midway of the final turn and came again. INFERNO LAD weakened. FLIGHT OF GOLD stopped. RAYCART quit early.

Heavy Going Forecast for Derby

1,000 to Vie in Field Day Program at Maryland Tomorrow

Four Sports Are Carded For Day

High School Lads Meet on Track; Hoyas Face Old Line Nine.

SPRING sports, with emphasis on track and accent on youth, will be supplied the customers in wholesale doses tomorrow at College Park, where the University of Maryland will stage the annual sportswriters' headache, officially referred to as field day.

With interscholastic, freshman and trianglar varsity track meets, a baseball game, tennis and lacrosse matches booked, requiring in all the services and abilities of approximately 1,000 college boys and high school youngsters, the affair looms as the greatest athletic pageant ever held in this vicinity.

G. U. Meets Maryland.

Georgetown and Maryland, resuming their baseball series after a lapse of two decades, open the varsity program at 1 p. m. But the high school youngsters, a small army of them, get started at 12:30 p. m. in their annual quest for county championship laurels.

At 1 o'clock, or as soon thereafter as practicable, Maryland's freshmen toe the mark with Gallaudet for their meet, while the Terp varsity runners vie with Washington and Lee and Virginia Polytechnic in a triangular meet. Syracuse will help the Old Liners close the program beginning at 4 o'clock in their lacrosse match.

Forty-eight schools, including the five local high schools and four from Virginia, will run in the interscholastic games. As each team will average 15 men there will be around 620 boys in action, and it will be real action with the county laurels at stake.

To Defend County Title.

Bel Air High School's forces will defend the county title won last season, while Tech High School, of this city, will strive to retain the honors it gained last spring in the open events.

Injuries to Henry Schaaf, center; Ike Rabbitt, second defense, and Lou Ennis, cover point, have forced Coach Jack Faber to revamp the Old Line lacrosse line-up for the Syracuse battle. Charlie Yeager, defense man who has been out all season with a fractured collar bone, will get into action for the first time at cover point. Oden Bowie, second defense, has been shifted to center, and Len Rombro will assume his position.

Bethesda-Chevy Chase High will lead Montgomery County's representatives in the county class of the Maryland meet. Seventeen entrants from the Leland School will compete, while Montgomery Blair has only five entries and Rockville one. Poolesville and Sherwood have not picked their squads, and Damascus and Gaithersburg will not be represented.

Among the squad entered by Coach Kupka of the Bethesdans are Fulks in the 100; Wood, Harris and Pasma in the 880; Brosius in the 440; James, Putnam and Garlock in the high jump; Fulks, Smith and Hughes in the shot; Amos and Pasma in the broad jump, and Harper, Amos, Milan and Putnam will comprise the half-mile relay team.

Coach Knight of the Blairites has Linkins and Ray Scoville in the 880, Reuben Scoville and Weisman in the 440, Weisman in the 220 and Fincham in the 100. Rockville High will be represented by Charlie Barber in the 100. Coaches Lehr and Johnson of Sherwood and Poolesville, respectively, will select their teams tomorrow.

Washington-Lee Nine Beats Bethesda, 10-4

Ballston, Va., May 2.—With Tommy Fairfax and Hoot Dansberger leading the offensive, Washington-Lee High School rang up its third straight victory here this afternoon as it turned back Bethesda-Chevy Chase High, 10 to 4.

The Little Generals fell on Pitchers Crowell and Rupert for 13 hits, eight of which were two triples, a double and a single by Dansberger, and two doubles, a single and a home run by Fairfax. Eddie Johnson, son of Walter Johnson, connected for a triple and single for the Marylanders.

Coach Reassigns Uniforms at Blair

A new call for baseball candidates at Montgomery Blair High struck a note of fear into the former regular members of the school nine and the entire squad yesterday—and several additions reported to Coach Bride for a pep talk.

Bride collected all uniforms and released the members from their positions after the 23-to-2 defeat at the hands of Washington and Lee in which 11 errors were made. It was the team's fourth loss in five starts.

Aside from Arentson, in center, and Littlefield, catcher, the rest of the team will take their former places for the games next week. Uniforms were reassigned, and a new batting order decided upon. The meeting was concluded with no reduction among the personnel, but a promise for reduction in errors and strike-outs.

G. U. Prep Host To Richmond Linksmen

WHAT is expected to be one of the best scholastic golf matches of the season will take place tomorrow at Garrett Park, where Georgetown Prep School's team will attempt to stop the triumphant march of Thomas Jefferson High, of Richmond.

It isn't often that two such fine prep teams clash, and a large crowd is expected. Jefferson High, unbeaten in eight straight matches, holds victories over Woodberry Forest, Western High, Newport News, Petersburg and William and Mary and Hampden-Sydney freshmen.

Howell vs. Dettweiler

Tommy Howell, Virginia State scholastic champion, brother of the more famous Billy, will meet Billy Dettweiler, Georgetown Prep's ace, in the feature match. Bobby Troutman, the Atlanta flash, will face Frank Sutton 3d, Jefferson High star, and runner-up for the Richmond City championship, in the same foursome.

Stuart Proffit and Edloe Donnan, of Jefferson High, will oppose Austin Parks and Capt. Hughes Spalding in the other matches. Georgetown also has available Jack Dettweiler, Ray Higgins, Dick Canning and DeSales Powell.

After taking a ragged 41 on the outgoing side, Dick Lunn, who won the District crown two years ago, shot a sizzling 33, 1 under par, on the back nine yesterday at Chevy Chase. Lunn's brilliant comeback, which featured a birdie 3 on the difficult home hole, was not enough to help himself and his partner, Bob Barnett, pro, in their match with Roland Mackenzie, Congressional pro, and Johnny Brawner, Roland's amateur pal. Thanks to a 36—35—71 by Mackenzie, the Congressional pro and Brawner, triumphed, 2 and 1. Brawner had a 74, with a 34 on the back nine, and Barnett a 75.

Tennis players as a rule are not good golfers, but Wilmer Allison, the Davis Cup star, is an exception. The Texas Hurricane, playing with H. L. Richards yesterday, shot the tough Chevy Chase course in 76, holing all putts. Allison drove the ball for alarming distances, chipping into the cup on the 167-yard fourth for a birdie deuce, and reaching the 257-yard ninth in one blow.

William Wade Hinshaw, the former Metropolitan Opera star, played from the back tees at Columbia Country Club, with summer rules prevailing, and pounded out a 39—36—75.

Virginia Track Meet Draws 10 Schools

97 Boys to Vie Tomorrow for Annual Honors at Charlottesville.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

UNIVERSITY, Va., May 2.—Ten schools have entered 97 track and field men in the annual preparatory school track meet to be held Saturday afternoon at the University of Virginia's Lambeth Field.

Staunton Military Academy leads the list with 22 men entered. Woodberry Forest School has 18 entries and Episcopal High School 16. These are the three favored teams to take the prep school track championship for 1935.

Among other schools entered are McGuires and Virginia Episcopal with 8, Fork Union and Fishburne with 6, Augusta and St. Christopher's with 5 and Hargrave with 3.

Until four years ago the preparatory school meet was run off the same afternoon as the meet of the Virginia High School Literary Athletic League, but as the number of entries increased in each class it was decided to separate the two events.

On Saturday, May 11, the High School League will stage its twenty-first annual meet on Lambeth Field, with between 400 and 500 high school boys entered.

Training School Is Routed, 11 to 1

Bows to Baltimore Team; 30 in All Strike Out.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Laurel, Md., May 2.—Thirty strikeouts were registered here today as St. Mary's Industrial School of Baltimore defeated the District Training School, 11 to 1, on the latter's diamond.

Hauski, St. Mary's shortstop, made four hits in five trips to the plate. Saunders tsarred for the District nine in connecting safely twice, stealing three bases and scoring their single tally.

For Belvoir Wins.

The Fort Belvior Baseball Team won a 1-0 game yesterday behind their ace pitcher, Charley Rahn, as he set the strong Fort Humphreys' team down in order. Rahn recorded 18 strike-outs.

Allison, Visitor Here, Says He Won't Be Pro

By John R. Vosburgh.

PROFESSIONAL tennis and the fabulous wealth which it is said to have brought the Tildens, the Vineses, the Lotts and the Stoefens has no lure for Wilmer Allison, No. 1 ranking amateur of the country. Nearing the age of 31 and with his blond hair growing so scanty that a bald spot is beginning to appear on top, the Texan yesterday scoffed at the possibility that his tennis career might end with him swinging a racket for dollars and cents.

"I'll never play professional tennis," Allison said between strokes on the Chevy Chase Club golf course, "for the simple reason that I know it can never have any appeal for me. I am an amateur and will never be anything else. Playing for money doesn't agree with me."

With that one of the finest tennis players of all time put the wiry shoulders which blast out his terrific smashes on the court behind a tee shot aimed at a green 250 yards away. The drive sailed, or rather shot out like a long, low Babe Ruth home run, and despite the comparatively low trajectory landed well over the edge of the green, rolled a few feet and stopped 15 feet from the cup.

Shoots 76.

It was a deuce for a birdie and gave Allison a 76 for 18 holes. He is that kind of a golfer. He is probably the best two-sport athlete that ever topped a national ranking. Golf he looks upon as a relaxation, a preventive against too much tennis at too early a stage in the season. He won the medal in the Old Dominion golf championships recently and went as far as the semifinal round. Intensive training for the Davis Cup campaign abroad will force him to give up the sport after one more week, however.

Allison is not sure how much longer he will be playing tournament tennis, but thought it might not be more than two seasons.

"I'm 30 now," he pointed out, "and you can't keep tournament tennis up as a steady diet forever."

Plays Much Tennis.

"Yeah," he said, "Bobby is taking up tennis in a big way. He was out at all the tournament matches in Atlanta and is playing as much tennis as he is golf. I played some golf with him, but he wouldn't play me in tennis."

Allison said he thought he fully deserved getting both singles and doubles assignments on the Davis Cup team. He gave the impression that he would be disappointed if such were not the case. The mainstay of the team said he and his teammates were going over to "get the cup" and added that he meant "exactly that."

Allison and Van Ryn, the world's ranking amateur doubles combination, will play together for the first time this year today in the Chevy Chase Invitation doubles tournament, for which they are in Washington. Van Ryn was expected to arrive last night. Donald Budge, who will be a member of the Davis Cup squad, is considered by Allison as the most promising young player in the country.

Plays in Doubles.

Within half an hour after completing his golf round, Allison was playing tennis on the private court of Lawrence A. Baker, treasurer of the United States Lawn Tennis Association. It was an impressive tennis gathering, with Allison and Julian T. Myrick, former U. S. L. T. A. president, playing Baker and Dwight F. Davis, donor of the Davis Cup and former Secretary of War.

"Is this a friendly match or do we allow lobbing?" asked Allison, whose tremendous overhead devours lobs with rapacity.

They apparently decided it was an unfriendly match, for there was lobbing and Allison proceeded to swing his Texas triphammer into action. After it had smashed a goodly number of points between, through and around the Baker-Davis combination, the former finally muttered: "Well, Dwight, I guess we're in a hole now."

"No," said the former Coolidge Cabinet member courageously as he cautiously set himself for another Allison sally. "This is no hole. This is just a depression."

Walkersville Defeats Thurmont Nine, 15-3

Walkersville, Md., May 2.—Walkersville continued its winning streak by defeating Thurmont in the northern division of the County High School League here, 15 to 3. In the eighth inning Lawyer blew up and Walkersville amassed nine runs. While Crum was hit for 11 safeties, he kept the blows scattered and was effective in the pinches. Six errors also contributed to the downfall of the Mountaineers.

Central to Face Roosevelt in Series Duel

Veteran Hurlers Give Edge to Raymen in Tilt at Eastern Field.

CENTRAL HIGH, central figure of the annual drama known as the interhigh baseball series, this afternoon takes the leading role against Roosevelt High team, whose batting power might conceivably spring the villanous trick of actually upsetting the central figures on their collective necks. The setting will be Eastern's diamond and the curtain will rise at 3:30.

Such a happening would tend to make the series decidedly interesting in view of the fact that Central is the people's choice to win the title. It is a bit difficult, however, to disregard the fact that the smooth-fielding Centralites have won their last three games in a row against such teams as Mount St. Joseph's, Marblehead (Mass.) High and the powerful War College ball club. Today's will be the second game of the series, Tech having beaten Western in the first Tuesday, 14 to 7.

It is also a bit difficult to disregard the fact that Coach Jack Ray, of Central, has five veteran pitchers eager for a starting assignment, and that Coach Leonard Brown has but two rather inexperienced hurlers going under the label of a pitcher. Kenneth Blundon or Harold Bowers will be the mound choice for Roosevelt, with Frankie Bovello, a catcher last year, held in reserve. Frank Baroni, the Ruff Riders' veteran hurler, is a victim of German measles.

Brick Hayes will start for Central with Lefty Rowles standing as Coach Ray's second alternative. Whoever it is, he will go in the box facing the same hard-hitting bunch which toppled unbeaten Alexandria, 12 to 11, Tuesday, and clouted out 14 hits against the Maryland Freshmen yesterday, though losing, 11 to 10.

Except for the pitching, Roosevelt has few excuses as a ball team goes. Either Julius Lewis or big Reds Green will catch, Frank Bailey will be at first, George Coakley at second, Jimmy Woodward or Elwood Ey at short and the veteran Jack Neely at third. Francis Coakley, Bovello and Lewis or Green will be in the outfield. All of them are good, if somewhat care-free ball players. The only team both schools have played is Alexandria, which beat Central, 6 to 5.

It was made known yesterday that Woodward, Lewis and Bowers will be ineligible to play after today due to scholastic failures reported by the new advisory which goes into effect Monday. The presence of Green will offset the loss of Lewis, however, for future games, and Sherwood Robinson, brother-in-law of Joe Cronin, who will be made eligible by the advisory will offset the loss of Woodward.

Attendance Boost Shown by Leagues

By the United Press.

New York, May 2.—The 1935 baseball season is off to a booming start, with robust attendance reported in most sections and the foundations laid for thrilling pennant fights in both major leagues, a United Press survey of the season's first phase, showed tonight.

While the clubs were traveling today—Eastern American Leaguers into the West and Western Nationals into the East—for the year's first intersectional clashes, a check of the 16 big circuit cities showed that approximately 1,118,000 fans had attended the 104 games already played in home areas—a heartening increase over the first phase showing of 1934.

Md. Frosh Defeat Roosevelt, 11-10

High School Lads' 8 Runs in Ninth Futile.

A rousing rally by Roosevelt High School's baseball nine in the ninth inning fell 1 run short of tying the score as the University of Maryland freshmen won their first game of the season at College Park yesterday afternoon, 11 to 10.

Entering the final inning on the short end of an 11-to-2 score, Roosevelt counted 8 runs and had the tying marker on base when Bill Bryant, Old Line relief hurler, fanned Green to end the game.

Kyle Ruble, brother of Ralph Ruble, former ace Maryland hurler, pitching the first seven innings, held the visitors to 8 scattered hits and 2 runs. Meanwhile, the Old Liners were pounding Bowers, Roosevelt moundsman, for 13 bingles and 11 runs. Feltner went to the hill for the visitors in the sixth and held Maryland hitless and runless.

Burke's Rival Withdraws From Bout

THE Steve Kadish-Kirkwood Burke four-rounder that was to have played an important part on the preliminary card to the Buck Everett-Natie Brown main event at the Auditorium Monday night apparently is "the bout that never will be made."

The bout was first announced when Kirkwood was an amateur and Kadash just another Army fighter. It was announced for an amateur card promoted at the Auditorium by Matt Twomey's Olympic A. C. Burke withdrew, the District A. A. U. slapped a suspension on him, which prevented his competing in the National A. A. U. Tournament and charges and counter-charges flew from all angles at a meeting seeking to have the suspension lifted. The suspension was not lifted, and Burke turned professional.

Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn immediately cornered Burke's services and signed him with Kadash. Burke's manager, Joe Bateman, protested long and loud, but finally was talked into accepting it by Ahearn.

Claims Lack of Time.

Yesterday Kadash withdrew from the bout, claiming lack of time to prepare for the contest. The score now stands 1-all on withdrawals, with Ahearn the only casualty.

Ahearn yesterday added two six-rounders to the card. Andy Martin, one of the veterans of the featherweight division, who has scored wins over such as Eddie Shea, Benny Bass, Tommy Paul and others and still is able to fight, has been matched with one Johnny Canzoneri, reputedly a cousin of the immortal Tony. LeRoy Zinkham and Jimmy Wade, who staged a classic battle the last time out, have been rematched.

Norman Barnett and Steve Collucci have been signed for another six and one more bout is in the making.

Stocks Stage Rally at Close; Metals Sold

Some Prime Issues Forge as Much as 2 Points Higher.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 2.—Stock dealings took on a sprightlier tone in late dealings today after early irregularity. Gains of fractions to nearly 2 points were common among trading leaders.

Silver shares were rather freely offered in the morning, and this pressure robbed market forces of much enthusiasm in the early hours. The cut of 3¾ cents an ounce in bar silver at New York, to 71¼ cents, following earlier mark-downs in the metal in London and Montreal, apparently was discouraging to speculative circles.

However, as the day wore on, the silver shares were better taken and held well until near the close when the rebound was shaded. Final losses in the group ranged from fractions to around 2 points.

Turnover in the stock exchange ran on a par with the levels prevailing in recent sessions, amounting today to 876,970 shares. The day's advance, as measured by the Associated Press average for 60 stocks was .3 of a point at 39.6.

Among shares closing major fractions to a point or so higher were Westinghouse at 42, American Tobacco "B" at 84, Union Pacific at 90¾, Pullman at 37¼, Santa Fe at 40⅞, Woolworth at 57⅝ and Union Carbide at 52⅝.

Snow and Rain Benefit to Crops

Prospects Cause Selling of Wheat and Corn to Lower Levels.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 2.—Beneficial rain and snow in the spring wheat territory brightened crop prospects and dampened the spirit of wheat buyers here today. As a result, wheat prices lost about a cent and corn almost as much.

Private trade advices indicated that current and recent precipitation in both wheat and corn territory had materially relieved the crisis coincident with dearth of subsoil moisture reserve in some drought sections of the Northwest, although holding up seeding of the 1935 crop to some extent. The moisture will more than make up for this by replenishing the reserve, commentators said.

Rallying from a maximum overnight drop of nearly 2 cents, wheat closed ½ to 1⅛ cent below yesterday's finish, July 97 to 97⅛, and corn was ⅜ to ¾ off, July 83⅞ to 84. Oats lost ¾ to 1 cent, and barley was unchanged to a cent down.

It was reliably reported Italy had bought between 5,600,000 and 7,200,000 bushels of wheat from France. Corn for the most part followed wheat, although the demand for the cash article improved. Provisions were higher, reflecting a gain in hog prices.

Bank Clearings Top 6 Billions, Year's High

New York, May 2 (AP).—Bank clearings for last week reached a new high for the year at $6,011,214,000, Dun & Bradstreet reported today. For the corresponding period in 1934 the clearances were $5,615,558,000 and last week's clearances exceeded those of the preceding week by $1,352,609,000.

Part of the gain was attributed to the heavy settlements incident to the opening of the new month.

New York clearings totaled $4,211,571,000, a gain of 5.7 per cent over last year. The aggregate for outside centers was $1,799,643,000, an increase of 10.4 per cent.

Cotton Rallies On Spot Buying

Market Sold Down in Early Trades With Drop in Silver.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 2.—Appearance of spot house support in new crop months late today rallied cotton prices after early declines of 7 to 11 points. Final quotations were very steady at a net decline of 1 point to an advance of 7 points.

Trade buying of current crop deliveries had a slightly stabilizing influence on the market at the opening but forward positions eased under liquidation and selling by Wall street, the Far East and New Orleans. Early selling was attributed to weakness of silver and continuing uncertainties over Administration policies. Prices were carried down $1 or more per bale from last week's highs.

The late buying by spot houses centered in October, boosting it from 11.24 to 11.40, and covering developed in the new crops. Nearby positions, however, failed to share in the late rally.

Berlin—Greater purchases stiffened prices on the bourse yesterday. The improvement registered at the opening was maintained throughout the session, and the closing was steady.

Finance, Business, Economics

Wall Street Surprised at Treasury Willingness to Allow Working Balance to Drop Below Billion; Expect Big Bond Issue for New Money June 15.

By a Special Correspondent

New York, May 2.—The financial district, which now follows the course of Treasury operations with unusually close attention, anticipates a large offering of United States Government obligations for the purpose of raising new money to finance the public works and relief program for June 15. It is expected that the Treasury will seek to obtain at least $1,000,000,000 of new funds, and may ask as much as $2,000,000,000, at that time.

Considerable surprise is expressed by some bankers and Government bond dealers at the willingness of the Treasury to permit its cash position to run down latterly. Unusually heavy cash payments have been made, without any effort to replenish the working balance in the general fund. On April 15, the Treasury paid off in cash the Fourth Liberty 4¼'s called for payment on that date which had not been turned in for exchange into new 25-year 2¼ per cent bonds. More than $315,000,000 of these bonds were not converted by their holders, and most of these are believed to have been paid by now.

Also, Secretary Morgenthau has reduced the weekly offerings of Treasury bills since April 1 from $100,000,000 to $50,000,000, presumably for the purpose of saving interest. At the same time, the Government's income in April has been relatively small, so that an excess of expenditures of some $550,000,000 occurred during the month.

The Treasury faces another special outlay on June 15, when the called First Liberty Loan bonds not converted into 2⅞ per cent long-term bonds or 5-year 1½ per cent notes will have to be paid off. It is estimated that upwards of $200,000,000 of these obligations will probably have to be paid in cash. Furthermore, the Treasury has received from national banks several hundred million dollars of currency for the purpose of redeeming national bank notes, as a result of the calling for redemption of the prewar Government bonds enjoying the circulation privilege. As the national bank notes are presented to the Treasury and redeemed, this currency is paid out. The redemption of the national bank notes thus has given the Treasury a temporary deposit of cash which will shortly be lost.

Working Balance Falls Below Billion.

The Treasury reports for each business day its "working balance," which is the cash on hand and in bank it possesses over and above its current liabilities and the remainder of the gold and silver profit not yet disbursed. It has been the policy of the Roosevelt Administration to maintain an unusually large cash balance in the Treasury. The enormous deficit is one reason for this. The rather strained relations existing between the Administration and the banks also may have dictated the wisdom of such a conservative course.

The Treasury appears to have departed from this practice during the past few weeks, however. The working balance has now dropped below $1,000,000,000. Considering the fact that each week $25,000,000 in Treasury bills are being paid off, since $75,000,000 mature and only $50,000,000 in new bills are sold, and allowing for further redemption of national bank notes out of cash already deposited with the Treasury, this working balance will probably about cover the deficit until June 15, when unconverted Liberties will have to be repaid.

Another severe dent in the Treasury's aggregate cash position will be made on July 1, when $800,000,000 of 2 per cent consols will be paid off with gold certificates in the general fund resulting from the profit obtained through dollar devaluation. Redemption of these bonds will absorb the bulk of the gold left in the general fund. These gold certificates are not counted, however, in computing the size of the working balance of the Treasury. Nevertheless, their elimination from the Treasury will emphasize the extent to which the strong cash position is being weakened.

How Cash Can Be Replenished.

It is evident, therefore, that the Treasury will shortly have to change its policy and move vigorously to replenish its working balance. The first and easiest step is an increase in the amount of the weekly Treasury bill issue to $100,000,000, in place of the $50,000,000 offerings made since April 1. A return to the $100,000,000 weekly rate of Treasury bill issues would give additional funds at the rate of over $100,000,000 monthly, since the weekly maturity of these bills is now $75,000,000.

However, with the public works program ahead, and with the $1,250,000,000 of Fourth Liberties called for redemption on October 15, the Treasury is likely to replenish its cash resources generously in its June 15 financing. At that time, the only maturity will be $416,000,000 of 3 per cent notes. A new "split offering" of notes and long-term bonds is expected by most observers in the financial district. Bankers doubt that the Treasury can now safely offer a bond of long-term maturity, such as 25 years, with a coupon rate of less than 2⅞ per cent, owing to the strain on the technical position of the Government bond market imposed by the huge conversion operations still under way. On the other hand, with a maturity of say 15 years, a rate of 2¾ per cent would be feasible.

Of course, with the continuous pressure of excess reserves, which are again mounting to record levels, the Government bond market may advance sufficiently in the open market within the next few weeks to make possible a lower coupon on long-term bonds.

Enactment of the Harrison or Vinson bonus proposals, involving huge cash payments to veterans forthwith would make necessary a large new Treasury issue without delay, to provide the funds needed for this purpose. This financing would be over and above any offering made to replenish the central fund.

D. C. Mortgages At $1,300,000 In Four Months

Loans Are Made With Free Insurance Under FHA.

By R. Karl von Lewinski.

Insured mortgage loans totaling $1,300,000 have been extended residents of Washington during the first four months of 1935, according to a report made yesterday by J. K. Gilchrist, director of the District of Columbia Division, Federal Housing Administration.

The loans, made under the free insurance feature of the Federal housing act, have enabled the construction of approximately $500,000 of new building during the period. About $900,000 has been used for the refinancing of old mortgages on lowered interest rates or over a longer period of time.

The mortgage provisions housing act, although passed about a year ago, were not placed in active operation here until the first of January and have been steadily accelerating local construction since then.

Agency Handles Applications.

Applications for the new mortgages were handled by the banks at the outset of the campaign, but since March 23 all of the preliminary work has been taken over by the representatives of the Housing Administration.

Under the present system, the Federal agency passes upon the validity and insurable value of the mortgage and then places it with the bank for issuance of the loan.

In the five weeks that the change has been in effect, Gilchrist reported, more than 2,000 applicants have been interviewed at the local headquarters.

Appraisals made during the same period have exceeded $1,300,000. Past records show that about 75 per cent of all appraisals are approved.

National Gain Keeps Pace.

National headquarters of the Federal Housing Administration showed a nearly as encouraging volume of loan applications filed and grants approved under Title 2 of the housing act.

Since the new system was placed in effect all over the country, each week has seen a gain of 25 per cent over the preceding week. At the present time, applications at the rate of $1,000,000 a day are being sent in. The national average on new construction loans is about 31 per cent of the total applications, which means that new home building under the amortized insured mortgages is developing at the rate of $310,000 a day.

At the outset of the housing campaign 44 States needed legislation to make the provisions of the housing act legal. Today there are only 11 States in which the act can not operate.

Wide Upturn Reported.

Industries and cities from all parts of the country join in the reports of progress in the housing field. Employment was up 5.9 per cent in the paint industry for March, 1935, and payrolls up 11.8 per cent as compared to March, 1934. Increases in employment as well as payrolls are reported from the mill work industries and the brick and tile industries.

The Michigan Legislature recently passed a bill exempting all insured mortgages under the national housing act from the State mortgage tax.

New Jersey State banks have pledged more than $4,200,000 for issuing insured mortgage loans for new home construction.

A food store modernization committee has recently been formed in New York State to promote the modernization of 77,000 food stores, while Tucson, Ariz., is experiencing a building boom in that 61 new dwellings, valued at close to $400,000 are in construction.

Skilled Workers Scarce.

Baltimore office, Emergency Relief Administration, experiences difficulty in filling calls for skilled workmen in building trades. Receiving 50 to 60 calls daily for artisans, with supply down to 20 to 25. A large sanitary manufacturing company plant in Baltimore expects to reopen after three-year layoff and employ approximately 800 men.

Acting chairman of the Detroit Citizens Committee of One Hundred announces that more than $64,000,000 worth of large scale building or improvement has been planned for the present year by Detroit industrialists.

Residential construction in Detroit for March reached $536,000, compared with $165,000 for March last year, while repairs increased to $325,000 over $167,000 same period.

Marked increases in residential construction for March this year over March, 1934, are shown in Cincinnati, Denver, Los Angeles, Louisville, Miami, Pittsburgh and St. Louis.

Washington Suburban Bonds.

The Maryland Public Service Commission yesterday granted authority to the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission to issue $250,000 in bonds.

The bonds bear interest at the rate of not more than 4½ per cent, and will mature 50 years after date of issuance. The commission was granted an option of reduction after 30 years.

Money derived from sale of the bonds is to be used for water mains and sewage system construction in Maryland communities near the District of Columbia line. The District includes areas in Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties.

Sugar Trading Runs 3,264 Lbs. a Second

New York, May 2.—Over 3,000 pounds of sugar has changed hands with every tick of the clock on the floor of the New York Coffee & Sugar Exchange, according to the statistician there, who estimates that trading so far this year has been at the rate of 3,264 pounds per second. Since January 1, contracts representing over 5,000,000,000 pounds of sugar with a value in excess of $100,000,000, have been bought and sold.

The exact poundage was given as 5,034,752,000 pounds, worth, at an average price of 2.26 cents, $113,785,495. The contracts on the exchange are in uniform lots of 50 tons, raw sugar.

Curb Without Definite Trend

Columbia Pictures Gains 2 Points; Several Specialties Lower.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 2.—The curb market backed and filled today without getting far in any direction. Selling in some of the metals and specialties lent a touch of irregularity, but net gains of fractions to around a point were well represented in other sections of the list. Transfers, which approximated 154,000 shares, were about the same as yesterday.

N. Y. & Honduras Rosario, Bunker Hill & Sullivan and A. O. Smith, yielded around 2 points. Small declines appeared in Sunshine Mining, Swift Internacional, Lake Shore and Gulf Oil. Moderate firmness was the rule among shares of American Gas & Electric, American Cyanamid "B," Greyhound Corp., International Petroleum, Humble Oil and Hiram Walker. Columbia pictures gained nearly 2 points coincident with the demand for the certificate shares on the big board.

Federal Issues Slip Backward In Bond Trades

Utility and Industrial Averages Gain; Rails Are Lower.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 2.—Prices moved in divergent channels in the bond market today. There was some pressure on secondary rails during the early trading, but near the close this group, along with other semi-speculative ratings edged up from their lows in sympathy with the irregular recovery in the stock market.

United States Government issues were inclined to slip back a little after their display of quiet strength in the two preceding sessions. Corporate liens of prime rating were supported by bids which were in most cases even with or slightly above the closing levels of Wednesday.

Trading volume was lower in virtually all groups, with the total at $10,545,000 against $15,700,000 on the previous day. For the low yield issues the average was unchanged from the previous day at 110. Utility and industrial composites were a shade higher while the rails were slightly lower.

Interest in the foreign section was limited but the general tone was steady. Loans of Great Britain, France, Japan and Brazil were among those recording fair gains.

Lanston Type Sales Increase During 1934

Lanston Monotype Machine Co. earned $90,028.06 during 1934, President Harvey W. Best reported at the annual stockholders' meeting in Alexandria. Per share income on the capital stock outstanding was set at $1.67.

Volume of manufacture increased substantially, Best asserted, yet inventories were reduced during the year. Growth in sales reflected both an upturn in general business and in the printing trade, he asserted.

Several new lines, including a new figuring machine and photo-mechanical equipment, boosted the sales totals.

Dividend payments were maintained at the rate of $4 per share. Cash on hand increased from $1,205,888.62 at the end of last year to $1,359,613.88 on February 28, 1935.

During the year 1,998 shares of the company's stock were purchased in the open market, there now being 53,830 4-5 shares outstanding. Of these, 11,050 shares are owned by the company employes, an increase of 1,484 since March 1, 1929.

Monks, assistant treasurer.

Whiteford is counsel for the Hamilton National Bank. Other directors were re-elected as follows: Harvey D. Best, Karl W. Corby, John W. Drye, jr., J. Thilman Hendrick, Adrian H. Larkin, Royal T. Nats to Oppose White Sox Today

With the White Sox absolutely devoid of left-handed pitching talent, Manager Bucky Harris will restore his original Washington batting order which includes six left-handed hitters batting consecutively. Cecil Travis will return to third base, Johnny Stone will resume his right field post, and Joe Kuhel again will operate at first base, forcing Bluege, Schulte and Kress from the line-up.

Even against left-handed pitching it is doubtful if Schulte will return to the Nats' line-up soon. Jake Powell's recent play has eclipsed his veteran rival, who suffered a further setback in the last game at Yankee Stadium when he aggravated an already injured leg muscle.

Weaver Impressive.

The chief development among the Nats of recent date is the restoration of Monte Weaver to a starting role. In those two hitless innings in New York when he relieved Leon Pettit to hold the Nats' lead safe, Weaver impressed Manager Harris to the extent that he deems the skinny right-hander ready for a regular turn.

Although he is down to 146 pounds, Weaver is in better physical condition than when the season started. On the road, paradoxically, he gains weight, and with the new sinker ball he has developed, he is giving indications of a return to the form which established him as one of the league's outstanding right-handers three years ago.

Mule Haas, the White Sox outfielder, who is fated for a role on the bench this season, talked himself out of a job with the Detroit Tigers last week.

Manager Mickey Cochrane and Manager Jimmy Dykes had virtually concluded negotiations for a trade that would bring Carl Fischer to the White Sox in exchange for Haas, when Haas went vocal. It was in a game at Detroit between the two clubs. Unaware of the impending deal, Haas "rode" Cochrane unmercifully throughout the game. Mickey called off the deal.

Misquoted on Claims, Says Staunton's Head

Charlottesville, Va., May 2 (AP).—Maj. Roy W. Wonson, headmaster of Staunton Military Academy, said today he has been misquoted in press dispatches which attributed to him the assertion that all preparatory schools in Virginia openly and frankly subsidize athletics.

He said he had said "most," not "all" preparatory schools in the State openly subsidized athletics and that the names of no particular schools were mentioned.

Manager Is Elected.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., May 2.—At a meeting of the Ridgeley Athletic Club of the Potomac Valley Baseball League last night, Gerald Tichnell was elected manager of the team for the 1935 season.

Additional Sports News

Sunday Loops Primed for Season

Eight Contests Scheduled for Next Sunday in Four Leagues.

WITH the official opening of four outstanding Sunday leagues of The Washington Post Sandlot Association next Sunday, the sandlot baseball season will break into the sports picture with an emphatic bang. Forty teams throughout the District and nearby Virginia and Maryland, now enfranchise in the National City, Northern Virginia, Department Store and Maryland leagues of The Post Association, will go into action at the umpires' familiar command, "Play ball!"

Eight opening-game attractions, bringing together the strongest teams in the District, will supply plenty of competition in the National City leagues for the fans.

Meet on Ellipse.

In the A League, Blue Flame Valet will meet Union Printers on the South Ellipse; Murphy 5 and 10 faces Cherner Motor Co., on the east Ellipse; the newly renamed Dor-A team, to be known as Pig 'n Whistle, plays Miller Furniture at Riverdale and Army Medical will be host to the Rinaldi Coalmen on the Walter Reed diamond.

In B loop battles, Lewis Ice Cream Co. engages the Warwicks on the No. 2 Fairlawn diamond; David's Grill opposes the Woodmen of the World Elm Camp; on the north Ellipse Stansbury A. C. takes on the Capital Transit Nine on No. 3 Monument diamond, and the Georgetown A. C. makes is debut in Post Association ranks against the District Grocery store nine on the No. 4 diamond.

Every team a formidable contender with no odds-on favorite—that's the outlook in the Northern Virginia League. With the possible exception of Middleburg, last year's Post Association champion, and Manassas, runner-up, all the teams have strengthened their line-ups considerably.

The four new teams Vienna, Aldie, Marshall and Purcelville, all of which have ranked among the top-notch Virginia nines several seasons, make this year's league more representative of the northern Virginia counties.

Rhodney Furr, ace hurler, and the slugging triumvirate of Paul James, Bill Luck and Jimmy Hartman, whose individual efforts carried Middleburg to the 1934 pennant, are back again this year. Manassas again is placing its titular hopes in the strong left arm of Doc Ike Driefus and the heavy bats of Lester Saunders, Floyd Vetter and Jack Bradshaw, now playing with Virginia Military Institute.

Pitcher Lacey Lost.

The loss of Pitcher Lacey, now with St. Mary's Celtics, undoubtedly hurt Ballston's pennant chances. Several replacements have added a real punch to the team's offensive, however, and should it get hold of a good pitcher, it would not be surprising if the Ballstonians cop the flag. According to Capt. Charlie Rigels, Fairfax Station will put a vastly improved team on the field, as will Falls Church, now represented by the Falls Church Young Democratic Club.

If Earl McPherson can emulate his brilliant pitching record of 12 victories and no defeats in Post Association games, then the Arlington outfit is sure to be heard from before the campaign is over. The Millwood A. C., sponsored by the Lowden Light & Power Co., is one of the "dark horses." Little is known of the rosters of Vienna and Aldie teams, but their managers, Paul Jarman and A. C. Bonebreaker, respectively, have never been known to pilot weak teams.

The only change in the original schedule shifts the scene of the Falls Church-Manassas game to Manassas.

Alabama U. Star Turns Back 8 Foes Without an Earned Run

By the Associated Press.

UNIVERSITY, Ala., May 2.—Lee Rogers, southpaw pitching ace of the Crimson Tide, is hurling his way to fame with a brilliant record of eight straight triumphs without a single earned run scored up against him.

Belying the traditional wildness of left-handers, Rogers has pitched consistent ball to put Alabama at the top of the Southeastern Conference race.

During the 53 innings he has been on the mound for Alabama to date, Rogers has given up 22 hits and struck out 52 men—a record of almost a strikeout an inning.

His victories came at the expense of Ole Miss, 4; L. S. U., 2; Georgia Tech and Columbus in the East Dixie League.

He has started five games and won them all, going to the aid of his pitching mates in three other games to pull them out of the fire and receive credit for wins.

Big league scouts who have watched him work predict a career for him in professional baseball after his graduation this spring.

Fighter on Relief Eight Months Ago

ished Primo Carnera and won the heavyweight title. Braddock's share was $250. That was in June.

He didn't earn another penny in the ring until he fought and beat John Henry Lewis in Madison Square Garden November 16, for which he received $700. Of that sum he got about half after expenses were deducted. In the meantime, he was able to work two or three days a week as a stevadore on the Jersey docks.

Up to that fight, in November, he hadn't even an overcoat to wear. The few times he came around the fight lanes his hair was overhanging his collar.

At Christmas the milk man was about to shut off the supply for his three children, Howard, Jay and Rose Marie, but his manager, Joe Gould, not doing so well himself, dug up $37 and paid it. The owner of the apartment house where he lived in Woodcliffe, N. J., was a fight fan, so when seven months rent was overdue, he allowed the Braddocks to move from the fourth floor to the basement, where Jimmy worked out the debt as janitor. That was only six month ago.

Then Gould talked the Garden into matching Braddock and Art Lasky, Minneapolis heavyweight contender, and Braddock, going into the ring at 1 to 5, won in 15 rounds. He got $4,100 for his share. When expenses were paid that left $1,200 for himself. Enough to square up most of his debts. The tide turned, the New York State Athletic Commission named him the outstanding challenger. The Garden matched him with Baer for the championship June 13 in the Long Island bowl. A week ago he got $300 for a radio appearance.

Now the Braddocks are back on the fourth floor of the Woodcliffe apartment house, and someone else is doing the janitoring, because Jimmy is in training in the Catskills. His share of the Baer fight should net him at least $30,000. If he wins the title, his fortune is made overnight.

There's one more item in the financial report.

"As soon as I was paid off for the Lasky fight," Jimmy said today, still talking slowly, "I gave $300 to the relief funds of Union City. That covered the $240 I got all told when we were on relief. It was the only fair thing to do. I couldn't let the kids go hungry. I'm not ashamed."

Gaithersburg Nine Downs Rockville

Hamlin and Hardy in Form in 7-to-3 Triumph.

Gaithersburg High took undisputed possession of second place in the battle for the Montgomery County baseball title by defeating Rockville High, 7 to 3, yesterday on the Rockville diamond, a three-run rally in the fifth off Billy Cleveland clinching the game.

Hamlin was in fine form for the winners, striking out the first five batters and allowing only two hits in five innings. Hardy replaced him in the sixth. Hardy's four hits, including a double, garnered the batting honors. Cleveland made a futile attempt to win his own game by doubling with the sacks loaded in the fourth, tying the score at 3-all.

scratched" so that the wagerers may know which of the steeds have been well taken care of.

I hope that in my column you will find all the full flavor of true Kentucky racing. God bless Kentucky with her blue hay, her mint jalopes, her corn whisky and beautiful women (Mrs. Isabel Dodge Sloane). It is a thrill for me, folks, to return once more to Old Kentucky where I was born. Kin heah mah ol' mammy right noaw jess ez ah had her settin' on mah lap agin, croonin'—"shet you mouf, honey, shet up yo big mouf!"

Well, folks, I flew on down here and the first thing I did when I got here was to buy a beautiful souvenir program or winter book as it is called, and, folks, I see there are 110 entered in this Kentucky Derby, and all I can say is that when they get out on that cinder path at Churchill Flats it will be SOME race, folks, SOME race is all I can say, practically a stampede.

And I want to tell you it is going to be SOME job to pick a winner out of that many horses, especially on account of the claiming weight which many of them carry, which is a sort of a small scales that the jockeys carry in their sateens so that the weight will be the same at the beginning of the race as it is at the end, otherwise it is a foul.

There are many male horses in the race this year, better known to the racing gentry as grooms because you know how it is with horses—they are being married off practically all of the time—and even one or two female horses or geldings, that is to say, young female horses that have never been married and had fowls. After that they are known as fillets. This will tend to make the race more popular, especially among the younger or horse set, and many unexpected developments may be looked for.

Well, I am almost at the end of my space now and it is mighty good to be back in Old Louisville, the State where I was born. They love me down here, these simple, kindly folk, and I love to be back down among their horses again. As Sonny Whitney's butler said to me only the other morning, "The master is hout, sir!"

I get along with them all because I know their ways. Why, I had arrived here only five minutes when I saw Willis Sharpe Kilmer's chauffeur driving his car down the main street, hah! And as for Alfred G. Vanderbilt! He's here, too. And so it's hey for the Kentucky Derby all, the crack of the starter's gun, the straining of bridle against saddlebag, and the deep-throated baying of the pack in full cry. I'm off!

small ball. But I think it will take 298 this time. In the last six or eight years the scoring has come down."

Bobby is working hard on his own game. Last year he was just two strokes back of the leader, after pacing the pack most of the way.

"I've got to win in a hurry if I'm going to win," he said with a smile. "They say life begins at 40, but you don't notice so many of the championships going to fellows past that age. I started training three weeks ago. I was up to 161 pounds. Now I'm down to 154. I want to hit 148 for the championship. I'm not doing so much actual playing as I am spending time in getting into the proper condition, both mental and physical."

But just a couple of days ago Bobby registered a 70 and then followed up with a 68 on the championship James River course—a layout that stretches over 6,700 yards and is dotted with yawning traps. His game is on edge, as is shown by his two rounds that were six under par where par is exceedingly hard to get.

Is Heavily Trapped.

Oakmont is one of the longest courses in the world, 7,000 yards, as well as one of the most heavily trapped. No less than 182 traps are placed where they will catch the slightest miscue. There are 15 traps on the first hole, which is calculated to start most golfers off on the wrong foot. One trap, at the eighth, is so large that it took eight carloads of sand, 400 tons, to fill it.

All in all, the older brigade looks to Oakmont optimistically. Walter Hagen, Gene Sarazen, Tommy Armour, Harry Cooper and Bobby Cruickshank all regard the course as no place for youngsters.

"It takes heart," says Bobby. "It takes heart and head and hands. The youngsters have the hands, but you've got to get the others through many a long campaign. This is a veterans' year!"

Promoter Seeking Louis Bout Is Granted District License

EARL McDONALD, the colored promoter who is seeking to bring Joe Louis here in May and again in August, yesterday was licensed to promote boxing in the District by the Boxing Commission. The license was granted by the commission after each of the three promoters already licensed had been heard on the subject of granting the permit to McDonald.

McDonald did not ask the commission for sanction for a Joe Louis appearance here in an eight-rounder May 16, as had been expected, but he did tell the boxing moguls that he had every assurance that Louis would fight for him then and that contracts would be signed in New York shortly.

McDonald told the commission he was not asking for the license for the sole purpose of showing Louis, but that he expected to stage about four shows involving outstanding colored and white boxers during the summer. Because of the possibility that Louis might score a quick knockout over any opponent obtained for him, McDonald told the commission he planned on backing the card up with possibly three ten-round bouts between outstanding white boxers.

McDonald said Louis had been secured for the Washington appearance through the Philadelphia firm of Taylor & Gunnis. He said the New York Milk Fund, which has Louis tied up until after his bout with Primo Carnera in June, would not agree to let the Negro sensation show in Philadelphia until after that bout, but did believe that Louis' showing here might help to stimulate interest in the Carnera engagement.

Twins to Meet Jacket Nine Today

Special to The Post.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., May 2.—Alexandria High School's baseball team, its seven-game winning streak halted unexpectedly by Roosevelt yesterday, will seek to start another streak tomorrow afternoon at Baggett's Stadium, meeting Fredericksburg High School. The game will be one of a series to be played for the Third District title, and has a marked bearing on the State championship race.

The Yellow Jackets, coached by Johnny Fenlon, former George Washington University athlete, have not won a baseball decision from the Twins since 1932.

The Liberty Nationals, scheduled to meet Bill Hammond's Mount Vernon Independents Sunday, have canceled the contest. The Independents are seeking a strong independent team to fill in the engagement, and have their field at Engleside available. Manager Hammond may be reached by telephone at Alexandria 552-J.

Three Episcopal High School varsity teams will take to the road Saturday, while the junior track team engages Woodberry Forest School in a dual meet at Horton Field.

Billy Powell's ill-fated baseball team goes to Baltimore to meet Gilman in quest of its second victory in eight starts.

The Episcopal tennis team finds its record of 33 consecutive victories somewhat endangered as it meets Navy's Plebes at Annapolis.

The Saint Mary's Celtics will face their sternest opposition of the season on Sunday at Baggett's Stadium, when the strong Richbrau A. C., Richmond city champions, appears in the week's headliner. Either Jimmy Titcomb or Art Lacey will hurl.

Five games are scheduled in the Old Dominion League Sunday. The Cardinals meet Fort Hunt Rangers, Virginia White Sox face Franconia, McLean opposes Occoquan Grays, Clarendon A. C. clashes with Forestville, and Park Lane meets the Clarendon Business Men's nine.

The Washington Post Carriers of District No. 3, will meet the Times-Herald Carriers on the R., F. & P. diamond at 11 a. m., Sunday.

Candidates for the American Legion Junior baseball team will report for the initial drill of the season Monday afternoon. The Del Ray group, coached by Bill Langford, will report at the George Mason High

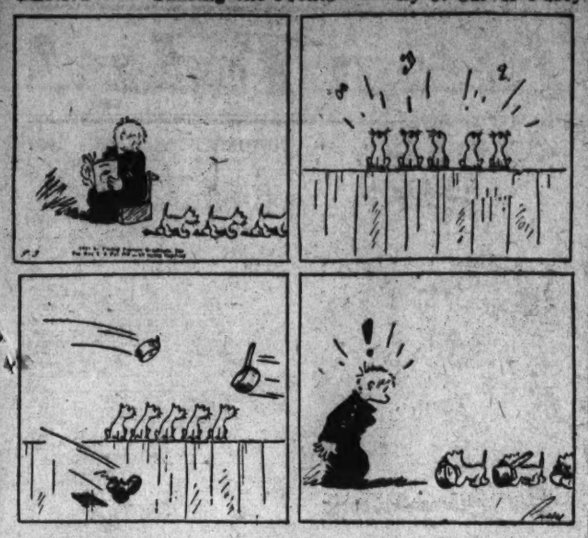
BENNY Sharing the Profits By J. Carver Pusey



"Cap" Stubbs What to Do? By Edwina

WELL, SHE WENT AN' TEASED HER MOTHER TO GET HER A NEW DRESS FOR TH' PARTY, AN', AN' SO THEN — WELL, I HADDA INVITE HER —

Once Overs

By H. I. Phillips.

Farewell to Oysters.

You're through for the summer.
You are leaving us after a long winter.
Your slippery presence has vanished from our midst; you are gone from the kitchen, the oyster bar and the dining room.
You have taken it on the lam, leaving a brief note: "Out; back September 1."

* * * *

Gone is the Tom Thumb glass of horseradish and catsup.
The oyster cracker bowl is empty.
The oyster bar has the atmosphere of an abandoned flivver.
The oyster opener looks like a man who has suddenly suffered a great personal bereavement.
Gone is the rattle of shells in the sink.

* * * *

The little woman who dotes on preparing oysters 30 different ways is sad and frustrated.
The housewife who read in a book that oysters are full of vitamins A, B, and C, and who insisted on dishing them to her husband three nights a week is sunk.
The guy who always ate 'em raw like a sea lion is on the spot; he will have to act human for a while.

* * * *

Into each life some joy must fall,
And you had yours coming to you.
No more huddling in those dank bins
Wondering if you're next! . . .
No more suspense as you hear
The heartless oyster opener
Move menacingly about, knife in hand!

* * * *

No more rows of grinning, fat faces
And interminable platoons of teeth!
No more last moments on those
Damned plates of cracked ice!
Oh, boy!

* * * *

No more baths in boiling milk
No more red pepper on your Scalded epidermis!
No more lemons!

* * * *

A four months' respite
In the cool green ocean
And the comforting bays!
Dig in, kid!
We wish you a great summer!

The Smithsonian Institution says there were never any such thing as Indian chiefs. Vas you dere, Sharley?

YOU KNOW MIN — AFTER HEARING ABOUT UNCLE BIM BEING TURNED DOWN — I'VE COME TO THE CONCLUSION THAT MAYBE HE WAS RIGHT ABOUT TAKING OUT MORE INSURANCE — AND I WAS WRONG IN TRYING TO DISCOURAGE HIM — YOU KNOW I'M NOT THE WISEST MAN IN THE WORLD —
YES — SHE KNOWS THAT YOU'RE NOT THE WISEST MAN IN THE WORLD - AND I KNOW IT - BUT THE BIG SURPRISE TO BOTH OF US — IS TO FIND OUT THAT HE KNOWS IT —
AND IF IGNORANCE IS BLISS — THERE IS THE MAN OF ALL PEOPLE IN THE WORLD WHO OUGHT TO HAVE HIS LIFE INSURED — HE'S LIABLE TO BECOME OVER JOYED AND DIE ANY MINUTE — WITH AN ATTACK OF PURE ECSTASY —

THE BUNGLE FAMILY Hot Stuff! By Harry J. Tuthill

To keep his people happy, a Sultan must make sacrifice.
You mean throwing a flock of spears into me is a sacrifice for you?
A Sultan must see such thing in very broad way.
All this business too bad. And bime-bye I guess I cry, but right now it are good-bye Bongle or good-bye throne.
But do not worry. I tell my boys to give you snappy finish and.... Hey Bongle, stand back or....
Hey, he loosen all of Sultan's teeth!
Do not play with this fellow, boys. Use spear!
Oh yeah!

District Scouts Assigned Camp For Jamboree

Place Selected on Mount Vernon Boulevard North of Four-Mile Run.

Local Scout participants in the national jamboree in August will be encamped on the Abington tract along the Mount Vernon boulevard, north of Four-Mile Run. This information was made available following a meeting in Washington of Scout executives from the Third region comprising Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

Registrations are now being received at the District of Columbia headquarters on the basis of one or two Scouts from each troop and plans are being made for a preliminary training camp for the District of Columbia Scouts on the jamboree site, immediately before the jamboree opens.

A guides' manual is being prepared to assist in the training of 1,000 local Scouts to act as guides and hosts to their visiting brothers. A group of older Scouts are being trained to assist in setting up training courses in the various troops of the council. A human interest story contest is being launched to develop interest in this training.

Moonlight Trips Popular.

The Camp Roosevelt moonlight trip on the Wilson Lines Thursday, May 16, is developing as one of the major events of the season. As a special feature of the entertainment on this trip an accordion band will make its initial Scout appearance. A dance orchestra will also be on board. This trip is not only for Scouts, but for eveyone—men, women and children.

Camporees, the overnight camping contests of the District of Columbia Scouts, are assuming an important place in the spring schedule of activities. Starting on May 11 when the Fourth Division gathers at Camp Wilson, they will continue through May and the early part of June with a council-wide event as the finale.

Through the courtesy of the National Park Service, Mr. Stipka, the well-known naturalist, has agreed to lead special nature hikes through Rock Creek Park. His schedule is as follows: Regular hikes through May, Wednesday through Sunday; leave 1:30, 3, 4:30 p. m., first week from Pierce Mill; second week from Stop 30 on Glen Echo line; third week from bird house in Zoo.

The opening of Camp Roosevelt on June 24 is being looked forward to eagerly by hundreds of Scouts and scouters. The assurance of several improvements and a possibility of still others gives this summer at Camp Roosevelt greater significance.

Court of Honor Off.

Cancellation of the court of honor for tomorrow evening at the Christ Episcopal Church, 620 G street southeast, has been necessary due to other activities in the church. The course will be held as usual the first Saturday in June. Other courts for the month of May are on the 18th at the Powell Junior High School, Hiatt and Lamont streets northwest.

Mothers Day, May 12, is being observed by many troops, many of them at the evening church service. This day has become traditionally observed by Scout Troops.

Cubmaster Maynard, of Pack 488, of the All Souls' Episcopal Church, is being congratulated on the occasion of becoming a benedict. The wedding was held at the cathedral on April 25, with Scoutmaster William C. Westlake as best man and Assistant Scoutmaster Robert Phafler as head usher.

Scouts of Troop 14, at the Luther Place Memorial Church, have arranged a three-act comedy, "And Mary Did," for Friday, May 24, to be given by the Puppeteers Dramatic Club of the church. The patrols of the troop will provide stunts for the evening and the proceeds are to be applied to the silver jubilee fund.

On the Air Today

By Katherine Smith.

Five world capitals will be linked today in a plea for world peace, when celebrated persons lend their voices to the international program arranged by the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. This is heard on WMAL, at 3:15 p. m.

Among the speakers are Viscount Cecil, Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British Ambassador; Monsieur Joseph Paul Boncour, former premier of France; Arthur Henderson, president of the World Disarmament Conference; Prince Tokugawa of Japan; Josephine Roche, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; Ambassador Saito, Ambassador Troyanovsky and Jules Henry, charge d'affaires at the French Embassy. Mme. Ivy Low Litvinoff, wife of the Russian foreign commissar and Mme. Krupskaya, widow of Lenin, will be heard from Moscow. Secretary and Mrs. Harold L. Ickes and Jane Addams will be heard from Washington. Sidney's orchestra will furnish the local music.

Columbia's "Derby (or Darby, as the case may be) Eve" is heard at 10:30 p. m. on WJSV. Thomas Bryan George, CBS turf commentator, will bring prominent personalities to the mike and ask them what they expect the Derby results to be.

A few time changes: "Hollywood Hotel" with Grace Moore as guest artist, is on WJSV at 8:00 p. m. . . . Richard Himber and orchestra has a new contract and schedule which places his program on WJSV at 9:00 p. m.

Daniel Carter Beard, National Scout Commissioner and honorary vice-president of the Boy Scouts, plays the part of himself in a dramatization, "Education for Leisure," on WJSV at 1:30 p. m. On the same program Dr. Stephen P. Duggan, director of the Institute of International Education, will discuss recent developments in foreign affairs.

Guests and jests:

Jimmy Melton is heard on Frank Black's spot, WRC, 9:30 p. m.

Harold "Pie" Traynor, star third baseman and manager of the Pittsburgh Pirates, is on the College From, 7:30 p. m., WMAL.

Stoopnagle and Budd want you to remember this is "Be kind to Poithboinder week." WJSV, 9:30 p. m. A. Radiofan suggested that a "poithboinder" is a cross between a spell-binder and a path-finder.

Auntie Bea plays the role of Queen Isabella, and attempts to explain hitherto undiscovered facts concerning the discovery of America. 8:00 p. m. WMAL. (Note: She might pretend she's Queen of the May. NBC's New York releases don't seem to agree.)

G. W. U. debate on WOL, 10 p. m., is on "Resolved: That the NRA Be Extended for Two More Years."

The "Silver Flute" and the man who plays it, "Marco, the Wanderer," returns to the air through WMAL, at 2 p. m. today. Marco's dramas-within-dramas are usually based on folk-lore, and are located in almost any country.

What are your three favorite tunes?

Charles Gaylord, of the Penthouse Serenade, writes that he's planning a program for radio editors on May 16. He wants each editor to select three tunes and send in their names.

We've a pretty good idea what we want to hear, but would like to get your slant to see how closely editorial (?) and public tastes agree.

Gaylord says any tune will do—current, popular (there's a difference), recent or old vintage, or the standards.

A young lady called up the other day and wanted to know how she could break into radio. She is interested in the announcing line, and wonders whether or not women are ever hired as announcers. Offhand, Elsie Janis is the only one we've heard much about, but there should be no reason why a woman couldn't be a good one.

Of course, engineers will tell you that female voices sound very badly on the air. Announcers will probably tell you that women haven't the presence of mind, or the business ability or something to do a good job. As for the "gift of gab" women are usually credited with too much—and that's a necessary prerequisite for good announcing.

Well, why don't we have more nice feminine voices handling station breaks, commercial plugs and so on? The young lady who called up had a very nice voice over the phone, and would probably sound as well on the air.

All of which makes us think we'd like to do a Sunday piece on the subject of announcers—bless 'em.

We have a new Colonell Seems that Gordon (Your Timekeeper) Hittenmark wired Kentucky's governor about NBC's Parade of States program.

Gordon is dedicating this morning's spot to Kentucky in honor of the Derby. The governor wired back greetings and indicated that a Colonelship would follow. Gordon says he's really a Colonel on the cob, because he comes from Iowa—where there's lots of corn, you know.

Maj. L. Merryweather Smith, of Kentucky, will be heard on the Timekeeper program at 8:15 a. m.

Search Continues for Body.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Front Royal, Va., May 2.—An almost continuous search since Sunday has failed to recover the body of Bradford Cook, aged 12, one of the three victims of a fishing accident on the Shenandoah River, near Riverton last Sunday. The body of Lloyd Cook, 11, a brother, was recovered. Funeral services have been held for Mrs. Granville Hockman, 21, the third victim.
